Intelligently adapting the romantic, dramatic, comedy and melodramatic elements common to race track pictures, the film embellishes their proved value by striking out on a novelly interesting track of its own. This is done by weaving fictional incidents about fact episodes in Tod Mason's (Sloan's) career. Given opportunity to ride by Deacon Devlin, Mason, instead of following the traditional style of sitting up straight in the saddle, stands up on his horse's shoulder to win many races. Soon the country's leading jockey and a contemporary of

John L. Sullivan, Diamond Jim Brady and Steve Brody, Tod falls in love with Linda Costigan. Learning that she plans to marry Baltimore is a tragic blow to Tod, but when Baltimore, who is in a financial jam, appeals to him to ride for rival owner Leland on Baltimore's assurance that his so doing will assure Linda's future happiness, the boy consents. During a race in England, Tod, riding for Leland, gets into a fracas with the jockey on Linda's mount and is barred from riding.

The scene shifts back to America, where, to suspense packed human interest drama, Tod prevails upon Diamond Jim to outbid Leland for Linda's horse. The dramatic quality of the episode is intensified as Deacon and Tod work over the crippled horse, finally getting him in shape to run again. Tod, reinstated through Brady's influence, rides the horse to victory, Baltimore is shown up in his true colors, and there's a happy love scene between Linda and Tod.

The picture is nicely mounted, intelligently directed and acted in that familiar manner usually appealing to ordinary folk. The excitement of its racing episodes, the manner in which it inculcates legendary sporting figures and incidents, together with the quality of its drama, all have appeal for male contingents of audiences. On the other hand, the romantic phases of the film give it a character to make it interesting to women.

Previewed in the Fairfax Theatre, Los Angeles. A typical neighborhood house audience, which had seen "San Francisco" as the regular attraction, found little difficulty in adjusting itself to the character of the entertainment provided in the added film.

Comedy Romance

Novel development of the light gay comedy romance story, good acting, better than ordinary production values, intelligent manner in which musical content has been included, and unique twists combine to give this picture exceptional entertainment and exploitation worth. The show moves to peppy dialogue, smartly contrived situations and brisk action. Actually the story is built about a farce hokum idea, but there is no tendency to go overboard. Rather, the efforts of writers, director, players and song contributors result in effervescent amusement of the variety ordinarily appealing to both specialized and general audiences. Particular interest, however, is to the elder adolescents and younger grownups.

The story revolves about a wilful, self-confident, modern girl determined to wed a many times divorced man whom her father detests. Meanwhile two jobless college graduates take to the classified ad columns in search of employment. Bennett, Sr., hires Joe to shadow daughter Kit and make sure she doesn't elope with Randolph. Kit hires Pete to pose as an heiress-pursuing French count. Her idea is that her father's resentment toward Joe will permit her to marry Randolph. As neither of the pals is aware of their respective jobs the stage is set for the comedy. While impersonating the count, Joe, whose real ambition is to be a radio crooner, falls in love with Kit, whose heart is still set on Randolph. To escape the dual menace of Joe and her father, Kit elopes with Randolph. Joe, who has made the grade as a radio performer, hears of the situation and broadcasts an appeal to Kit that everything has been a mistake. Despite Randolph's strenuous objections, Kit takes matters into her own hands and backtracks to Joe in a music embellished finale that brings the young folk together for a romantic fadeout.

In the principal roles, Gene Raymond, Ann Sothern, Henry Stephenson, Jessie Ralph, Alan Curtis and Gordon Jones turn in sprightly performances. The supporting cast also accounts for much of the fun. While music plays an important part in the production, particularly Raymond's singing, the film is not a musical, and, though that ingredient has substantial exploitation worth, the odd comedy romance story theme seems to be the angle to concentrate on in bidding for patron support. The kind of show that should come in for quite a bit of favorable word-of-mouth advertising, initial showmanship efforts should be directed towards attracting as large a number as possible for first performances.

Previewed in the Pantages Theatre, Hollywood. Following the dramatic "Mary of Scotland," the film seemed just the thing to start patrons on the emotional upswing. Played in conjunction with a similar dramatic offering, yet fully capable of standing on its own feet as a single, audience reaction indicated that the show should do well for itself.

The Man Who Could Work Miracles

(London Films-United Artists)

Fantasy, Comedy, Spectacle

The second H. G. Wells picture from London Films offers abundantly the most precious quality of originality. In the almost equally valuable element of humour it is also rich. For some communities there is the further attraction that, without being propaganda, it presents very effectively a "left wing" view of social problems in a form pleasantly satirical at the expense of existing institutions.

Essentially, it is good entertainment. The theme of an everyday commonplace sort of individual being suddenly endowed with complete power to suspend or alter the laws of nature leads to such whimsical results as the instantaneous transportation of an English policeman to the thick of a San Francisco traffic block, and the transformation of a fire-eating militarist's collection of lethal weapons into a range of agricultural implements. More serious satire develops when Big Business attempts to float the Miracle Worker as a limited liability company and the finale is a really impressive arraignment of the rulers of the world by a suddenly powerful representative of the Little Man. The picture therefore bustles with exploitation possibilities whether for the general public which likes the marvellous, or for the superior folk who like a Wellsian moral.

George McWhirter Fotheringay, a dry goods salesman in a British small town, suddenly finds himself possessed of the power to work miracles. The Gods, sportively inclined, have decided to give one man this power just to see if Mankind can be trusted with control of its universe.

Fotheringay for a time contents himself with conjuror's tricks and with such summary methods of solving difficulties as the already mentioned removal of the inconvenient police officer. Then his employer, with the latter's banker, tries to persuade him to exercise his powers for the enrichment of a little syndicate.

With a wave of his hand, he transforms himself into a handsomely robed ruler in a magnificent palace, in which the court ladies include improved editions of his lady colleagues in the store.

Suggested resistance to his plans leads him to give a demonstration of his powers. He orders the world to stop revolving. Instantly the palace collapses and all the living creatures of the earth begin to fly through space. Fotheringay gasps his "order" to the universe that all shall be as it was before he began to work miracles. An unpretentious, shy dry goods salesman once again, he uses his powers for the last time to request that they shall be taken from him forever.

The technical side of the picture is as admirable as the comedy, with the creation of the Palace of the Future and the parading of the potentates and kings as its high spot. Acting is excellent as regards the male characters—the women are negligible factors in the story. Roland Young puts up a brilliant piece of work as Fotheringay.

This is decidedly out of the rut and has abundant possibilities for the man who studies it with a view to playing up to the susceptibilities of his local public.

The picture held the trade audience at the Palace Theatre night private show. Laughter was continuous. A lot of Cockney in the early scenes was no drawback in London. After-comment called it very amusing as well as very clever and praised Young enthusiastically.

Postal Inspector

Melodrama

Exploitation of this picture is handicapped by the artificial and theatric quality of the motivating story. That is a rather formula repetition of the government law enforcement agency theme, this time the postal inspector coming to grips with a gang of mail robbers. Essentially a melodrama with a light dramatic and romantic contrast, further diversified by the inclusion of bits of comedy and a pair of song numbers, the background production effects re-depict, with the aid of many newsreel shots, the floods that ravaged some sections of the East last spring.

The plot is simple, but so much that is irrelevant is included that difficulties are encountered in following the motivation. Paradoxically, all dramatic tension that follows the preliminary character and theme identifying scenes can be easily anticipated.

Ricardo Cortez, established as an ace postal inspector, is attracted to Patricia Ellis during a fog-shrouded plane ride in which they combine efforts to prevent a panic among the passengers. Landing, Cortez discovers that his brother, Michael Loring, is in love with the girl. As Cortez goes about investigating complaints of abuse of the mails, Loring to impress Miss Ellis with his importance, tells her a big shipment of money is to be made. Innocently the girl reveals the secret to her employer, Bela Lugosi, running a night club as a front for his lawbreaking activities. As the floods rage, the robbery comes off as expected and Loring is suspected of complicity. However, with motor boats dashing over the raging waters for the thrill action chase, Lugosi and his mob are captured, the money saved, Loring freed of suspicion, and as Cortez moves on to his next job the young couple are left to resume their interrupted romance.

An average attraction from any viewpoint, the chief appeal is to thrill action fans. Before attempting any contacts for cooperation with postal departments, the picture should be seen in order to know how to proceed.

Drama

The title, presentation of quite a group of onetime screen luminaries in atmospheric roles and the manner in which auditors are taken on a Cook's tour of famous Hollywood locations, appear to be this picture's dependable interest creating assets. The story told, rather than being something gay, glamorous and attractive as the title naturally leads one to assume, is more a dramatic tragedy than anything else.

A washedup old favorite is persuaded to write his memoirs when he swallows the bait that such publicity as their publication causes will result in an opportunity for him to make a comeback. The actor is sincere enough, but the publisher colors the reminiscences up with a lot of actual and imagined scandal. When the series gets to such a point that further publication threatens the happiness of the actor's ex-wife and estranged daughter, the atmosphere becomes menacingly dramatic as the actor threatens to bring the publisher's wife into the mess. Melodrama is injected as the fearful, furious woman, determined that her past never shall be bared, takes a shot at the actor writer, an incident that brings a reconciliation with his wife and daughter.

As the picture is the kind that does not justify any too great an amount of showmanship enthusiasm mainly because the character of the entertainment is not that which the title would lead audiences to expect, the show is one of those matter of course affairs.

Previewed in the Westwood Village Theatre. The audience, while sympathetic to the players' efforts, was unable to conceal its disappointment in what turned up on the screen.

Domestic Problem Film

Keyed by the title, this program picture depicts the difficulties that lie in the path of marital happiness for a widower who marries again. A young son by the first marriage is the innocent cause of a misunderstanding which almost wrecks the marriage, and a rejected suitor of the girl is the unwitting factor by which the husband and new bride finally exorcise the ghost of the first wife. The plot solves, however inconsistently, the real life problem of how a couple can adjust themselves to domestic peace in spite of jealousy on the part of the wife for the dead person whose place she occupies and on the part of the husband for a suitor who attempts to capitalize on the misunderstanding which causes the first rift.

Kenneth, a successful young lawyer, marries Virginia a year after the death of his first wife. He is apprehensive that Junior will not like his new stepmother and sends him to a school in Switzerland so that he and his bride can be alone for at least the first year. All goes well for a time, but with Virginia expecting a baby, indicated by having her play a lullaby on the piano, Kenneth gets a cablegram that Junior is gravely ill.

The father's devotion for his first-born drives him to leave precipitately to go to his son's bedside, without consulting Virginia. The boy recovers and Kenneth brings him back to America, but leaves him in another boarding school. Returning home he finds Virginia, whose baby has been born in his absence, turned cold toward him because of the slight. She determines to leave him and is on the point of eloping with Dave, a former suitor, when she accidentally discovers her new lover's attitude toward her own first marriage. The revelation leads her to go to Junior's school and bring him home with her to the despondent Kenneth, who believes his happiness is lost.

Although marred somewhat by uneven pacing and plot weaknesses, the picture gives a new twist to the familiar triangle plot, for appeal to family audiences.

Walter Abel and Gertrude Michael give competent performances in the roles of Kenneth and Virginia.

The picture is based on the play "All the King's Men," by Fulton Oursler.

Wild West

This picture depends chiefly on Tim McCoy, veteran hero of western thrillers, who, in the role of Gentleman Jim Madigan, counters violence with craft and confounds gunmen by superior finesse and bull strength. The tradition of the wild west, complete with fast shooters and inveterate gamblers, its villainy and its chivalry, is faithfully upheld. A prologue, summarizing the feats and expounding the gentlemanly character of Wild Bill Hickok, introduces Gentleman Jim as successor to that picturesque pioneer in the guardianship of the more noble traits in the gambling profession.

Madigan exposes a card sharp who has cheated Jose Hernandez. The cheater is shot after being knocked unconscious by Madigan who is blamed for the murder and becomes an outlawed fugitive. He takes refuge at the Rancho Hernandez without knowing that the youth he befriended is the runaway son of the family. Harden, proprietor of the Silver Dollar saloon and gambling house, and Ace Morgan, gambler who sat in the card game which preceded the murder, are plotting to acquire the the Hernandez ranch by means of forged documents. Madigan, intrigued by the beauty of Juanita, Jose's sister, determines to save the family.

Harassed by the marshal who is seeking to unravel the murder mystery, Madigan persuades Jose to go home to his grieving father and sister, and confounds the gamblers by winning enough to save the Hernandez ranch. He pushes his luck to the limit by staking his winnings against Harden's saloon and winning with aces and eights, known throughout the west as the "death hand" because it was held by Wild Bill Hickok when he was killed by an assassin. Ace Morgan is revealed as the killer.

Wheeler Oakman as Ace Morgan and Earl Hodgins as the marshal give able support to Tim McCoy's portrayal of the noble and chivalrous gambler.

Straight from the Shoulder

Dramatic Romance

A new version of the father and son theme is presented here. Naturally human interest is the picture's predominant character. In line with the title's significance, the story is told sincerely and in an aura of realism, with dramatic and romantic situations so included that the resulting story is thoroughly logical and believable. Actually the yarn has two plots, both of which, from the point of view of the principal player, youthful David Holt, are highly dramatic.

Ralph Bellamy and his son Holt are witnesses to a gang murder. To escape the vengeance of gunmen Bert Hanlon and Noel Madison, father and son, seek the safety of a country hideout. There, as Holt becomes attached to an old gunmaker (Andy Clyde), who teaches the youngster all about firearms, Holt's happiness with his dad is shattered when he discovers that his father is falling in love with Clyde's niece, Katherine Locke. Madison and Hanlon invade Bellamy's sanctuary, determined to remove the one man who can connect them with the killing. Holt, however, learns the gangsters' identity and purpose, and in a sequence which is tight with suspense, he spikes the killer's guns. When Madison's gun explodes to kill him, Miss Locke comes through with a well aimed shot to account for Hanlon. This act of saving his father's life wins Holt's heart and he is willing to have the girl as his new mother.

Though a youngster is the central figure, the picture is not essentially a child show. Heroics, naturally attractive to juveniles, are a substantial part of the show, but the motivating dramatic quality has more than ordinary interest for adults. Thickly applied sentimentality having been smartly sidestepped, what comes upon the screen seems to be real and legitimate. As a whole the picture recommends itself to general audiences, with a primary appeal to family patronage.

Previewed in the Uptown theatre, Los Angeles. The work of young Holt won the sympathy of the audience, which at the same time demonstrated appreciation for the film as an entirety. McCarthy, Hollywood.

Secret Patrol

North Woods Adventure

This outdoor picture from a novel by Peter B. Kyne concerns the prestige of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the time-tried situation of two men in love with the same girl and the machinations of a gang of criminals in a remote lumber camp. Good character acting by Charles Starrett as Alan Craig, the heroic Mountie who gets his men and the girl, raised the picture slightly above mediocity.

Alan is sent out to avenge the supposed murder of his fellow Mountie, Gene Barclay. The two have remained friends even though Ann Barton has announced her engagement to Gene. A series of fatal and suspicious accidents in a lumber camp which Gene had been sent to investigate are being perpetrated by a gang headed by a blacksmith, Barstow, and including Arnold, a junior partner in the lumber firm. Alan, in disguise, gains the confidence of the gang, secures evidence against them, rescues Gene who has been in hiding because he disobeyed orders, and holds the gang at bay in a gun battle until help is brought. In the battle Gene is killed, clearing his blemished record and leaving the field clear for Alan to marry Ann. The picture closes with scenes of Gene's military funeral.

Well-photographed scenes of the north woods and authentic shots of scenes in the lumber camp lend authenticity to the film.

Heroes of the Range

(Columbia)

Western Drama

Built around and for Ken Maynard and his horse, Tarzan, "Heroes of the Range" is as full of hoofbeats, bullets and crooning cowboys as the newspapers are of politics. The period is as of the wild and six-shooting west, except when the singing starts, and then numbers as new as "Boots and Saddles" are sung by strong, unsilent men of the plains with all the dulcet polish of a radio studio.

The singing is segregated, however, in a couple of spots when nothing else is going on anyway. What goes on at other times includes shooting, riding, burglary, escape, pursuit, just a dash of love, and a copious helping of knuckle warfare with the right man winning in each instance. The horse gets into it, too, at the finish.

It's a story about a sleuth (whether federal, state or merely volunteer is not quite clear) who tracks down a bad man, fails to thwart an express robbery, makes up for it by capturing the desperado in his hideout, with the aid of the horse, and wins the gal.

Reviewed at the Arena theatre, New York, where the cheering from the children's section was loud and frequent.

Gypsies

(Amkino)

Russian Drama

It may be asserted with reason that the purpose of this picture is to glorify the collectivist farm of the Soviet by showing that its charms have induced the Gypsies, at least in the case enacted, to give up their wandering life and settle upon the land. At any rate, that is what happens.

It may be asserted, also, that the purpose is to contrast the aimless, insecure life of the Gypsy with that of the contented tiller of the soil, incidentally portraying in considerable detail the nature and operation of Gypsy law. That also, is done.

It may even be asserted that the purpose of the picture is to provide entertainment, by means of careful production, competent acting and the introduction of Gypsy music, sung and danced to. And that, also, is achieved.

The opening sequence, wherein a Gypsy wagon train on the drive is caught in a rain and thunder storm but moves steadily onward, is the sort of thing eulogized by writers who spell art in capital letters. It is among the best examples of that particular thing that have come from a camera.

A shortly subsequent sequence is "mammoth," "spectacular" and so forth in the way that the brink-of-the falls sequence in D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East" was mammoth, spectacular and so on. And there is a sequence toward the end of the picture, when Gypsy enemies duel with whips in a forest fastness according to tribal custom, that will leave Hollywood heartbroken at the discovery it didn't think of it first.

Betwixt and between and by use of these high spots, with frequent and sometimes abrupt interruptions for the introduction of Gypsy Music, is recounted the successful attempt of the president of a collectivist farm to persuade a Gypsy band to settle upon and work the land. As portrayed by a large cast including a half dozen extremely competent principals, the outcome appears wholly plausible.

Comedy of Complications

Exercising more than customary restraint and spreading his gags evenly, Bert Lahr gets a good deal out of his butler role in this Al Christie production. The elusive sweepstakes ticket, subject of many less successful ventures into the field of humor, is passed about a bit more plausibly and a lot more amusingly than is customary in the use of this seemingly inexhaustible comedy source. There is also a definite plot, and the people who support the comedian treat it seriously, affording the star's efforts benefit of background. Produced with more than usual care, the subject got a number of laughs in a projection room showing not exclusively attended by company employees.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Popular Science, No. 1

Informative Exposition

Photographed in color and made up of admirably contrasted subjects, adroitly presented and competently explained by a narrator, this is among the best subjects of its kind from this or any source. Major interest attaches, perhaps, to the forestry sequence, showing how fires start, the intricate means of determining their location and the elaborate, modern machinery and equipment available for stopping them. Gardening implements, including a snippergripper that is quite something, are effectively demonstrated. An exercising machine is tried out by a young lady of becoming proportions. Visit is made to an elaborately outfitted cosmetic establishment, showing manufacture as well as application of powder, lipstick, etc., and the name of Max Factor is uttered quite casually by the narrator when the gentleman himself, in person, is photographed in the act of prettying up a pretty. Other merchandise is not referred to by name.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Screen Snapshots, No. 13
(Columbia)
In Hollywood

Glimpses of the Hollywood scene and in particular shots of the stars while "off stage" are continued in No. 13 of this interesting series. The opening of Newport's $2,000,000 Harbor and Yacht Basin, a fashion show beside the Lido pool and a dog show at Palm Springs are attended by Lee Tracy, Anita Stewart, Lewis Stone, Olivia de Havilland, John Boles, Otto Kruger, Edward Arnold, Jeanette MacDonald and Irene Dunne, to mention a few of the 31 stars and near stars who appear. Running time, 10 minutes.

Milk Parade
Instructive

An instructive short subject, the camera here records the painstaking methods involved in the progress of milk from the cow to the consumer. With a running commentary by Lowell Thomas, the audience is taken to a farm, sees the milking of the cows, the transportation of the milk to the city in milk trucks, the testing, heating and cooling system in the milk plant, the bottling and finally in the early hours of the morning the milkman delivering the day's milk to his customers. Running time, 10 minutes.

Screen Song

Bumpered fore and aft with a cartoon takeoff on "The March of Time," well done, the section in which Louise Massey and the Westerners sing, play, and invite the audience to sing the song named in the title in accompaniment to the bouncing ball rests snugly in a firm setting and satisfies accordingly. The number is of the plains type currently in vogue and is well played and sung. The reel is a pleasant, double-purpose short suitable for any audience.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Toby Tortoise Returns
Silly Symphony

Having bested the collegiate hare in the traditional style on the track, Toby Tortoise meets his fleet and fancy opponent in the squared circle this time and, of course, triumphs again, although with a minimum of glory. Alongside the ring are ranged Mr. Hare's co-ed admirers, from the previous cast, and, on Toby's side, the chicken, also from a previous subject, that talks like Mae West and likes "a man that takes his time." Action follows the time chart of the racing subject, but pyrotechnics are introduced for the finish, and color is used with incredible and spectacular effect. The ultimate gag is sheer inspiration.—Running time, 8 minutes.

It's a Greek Life
Good

In this Rainbow color parade cartoon, an old Centaur, a cobbler by trade, envies the winged beings who fly through the air. Attempting to emulate them the Centaur straps a pair of ducks on his back, but the experiment is a failure. When Mercury leaves his magic shoes for the cobbler to fix, the Centaur puts them on and flies about his shop. The ducks, angered by the shoes, attack, taking the Centaur on a wild flight. Later when Mercury returns for his shoes the cobbler gives Mercury a fake pair. Mercury tosses the cobbler into a barrel of water, from which he eventually is saved from drowning by the ducks. Running time, 7 minutes.

Happy You and Merry Me
(Paramount)
Betty Boop Cartoon

Betty Boop sings a chorus of the song that gives the subject its title and then dispatches Pudgy, the dog, for a box of catnip with which to minister to a kitten made ill by devouring her candy. The cat follows him home, takes kitten and catnip away with her, and that's that—a sort of "good deed for today" plot without complication. Acceptable is a word for it.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Alpine Climbers
Color Cartoon

Rich in invention, contrast and imagery beyond even its own antecedents, this is the funniest of four new Walt Disney subjects screened to a press audience evidently made up entirely of Disney addicts. Departing the standard and, under other auspices, generally desirable pattern of a single plot thread meticulously adhered to, this subject splits quickly into three streams of action, each a riotous succession of events, and along each flows a full flavored torrent of humorous episode equal to the content matter of many a successful single subject.

Mickey Mouse, Donald Duck and Pluto are caught in the act of climbing an Alp, Mickey becoming embroiled with an eagle when he attempts to rifle its nest, Donald with a mountain sheep for no especial reason, and Pluto with a St. Bernard of which a good deal more could be seen in subsequent pictures with full credit to the Disney menagerie. Adventures of the party are varied, swift and hilarious. The subject is top notch for any and all audiences, times and places.—Running time, 9½ minutes.

Neptune's Scholars
Sportlight

Ted Husing, who narrates the subject, doesn't tell you that the half dozen swimmers who enact this moist version of "School Days" under water come up for air between each take, but he doesn't tell you that they don't. Anyway, all but a few moments at the start of the subject is photographed below the surface, where the girls and an obese but nimble gentleman permittee to go unnamed portray familiar classroom incidents. It's not the best Sportlight ever released, nor the worst, but it's pleasant stuff for this time of year.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Happy Heels
Slapstick Comedy

Buster West and Tom Patricola are principally featured in this knockabout adventure, the title of which dually describes their dancing feet and the characters they portray. The dancing is never permitted to get in the way of the comedy, though, and the comedy is never permitted to get above the slapstick level. The pair are pictured as sophisticates who impersonate rubes to invade a night club where their girl friends are employed and where they interrupt routines, kid the customers and in divers other ways seek to amuse. They are never still and never very funny, but the subject is loud enough and swift enough to offset a too long and too serious feature picture.—Running time, 18½ minutes.

Gypsy Revels
(Paramount)
Russian Musicale

If you like Russian music, of course, you like Russian music, and if enough of your audience likes Russian music it is reasonable to assume that enough of your audience will like this subject. The reverse is equally true. Yascha Bunchuk and his orchestra and choir and dancers, totaling quite a stage population, sing, play and finally dance some numbers labeled Gypsy, several of them familiar and others less so. What they do is competently photographed and recorded, if not especially novel or refreshing.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Highway Snobbery
Good

Krazy Kat in this subject plays the part of a road hog while showing off his new superspeed car to the girl friend. The Kat is having a great time, unmindful of the discomfort he is causing other motorists but the tables soon turn when the angered motorists' "gang up" on Krazy Kat. One car takes off the Kat's left fender, another his right, each succeeding car some other part, until Krazy and the girl friend are sitting on the road. The girl friend gets a ride back to town but Krazy is left stranded. Running time, 7 minutes.

Paramount Pictorial, No. 1

Topical Review

Shoes, California and Don Baker, organist of the New York Paramount theatre, are features of this mine-run review. The shoe sequence, leading the reel carries a credit line for I. Miller, whose bootery is neither tops nor also-ran but gets upper bracket prices. The California shots are in color and a narrator says nice things about the state. Don Baker is, of course, a Paramount fixture, incidentally a pretty good organist. The ensemble is undistinguished.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Irish Pastoral
Travel Film

While a becomingly moderate narrator supplies pertinent information, a careful camera roams Ireland, capturing a considerable number of excellent shots and conveying with rare effect an impression of quiet quaintness. Emphasizing the countryside, touching only momentarily the bustling activity of Dublin, the subject builds up slowly to the singing of a Gaelic love song by a village colleen and ends appropriately with horizon shots at twilight. It is artistically composed and consummately photographed.—Running time, 9½ minutes.

The Poets of the Organ
(Vitaphone)
Melodious

Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Crawford, termed the Poets of the Organ, play several numbers with occasional vocal interpretation by Robert Simmons. Included in the recital, among others, are the melodious strains of Masquerade, Rose in Her Hair and Butterflies in the Rain. An interesting camera shot of Mrs. Crawford playing with dancers in the background concludes the short. Running time, 10 minutes.

Kiko and the Honey Bears
Cartoon Comic

This is a Terry-Toon cartoon, by Paul Terry, Mannie Davis and George Gordon, scored and conducted by Philip A. Scheib. In it Kiko, the kangaroo, is employed to take care of the three bears while their mother gets the house work done. Kiko does so, with music.—Running time, 5 minutes.

Two More Units Protest Radio's Use of Players

With passage by two more exhibitor organizations of resolutions against participation by screen stars in radio advertising programs, and with President E. L. Kuykendall of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America mentioning the matter in detail in an official report to members, without recommending action, the microphone continued this week to claim the attention of big and little picture players while sponsors' announcers heralded the program presence of still others to come.

Organizations passing resolutions, paralleling closely similar expressions previously uttered by other groups, are the New York Independent Theatre Owners, meeting in regular session at the Astor Hotel, and the Independent Exhibitors, Inc., meeting in the Boston headquarters of the New England unit. In addition to expressing formal protest, the Independent Exhibitors further resolved "that the producers of motion pictures employing said stars, actors and actresses incorporate in their contracts agreements restricting picture players from radio broadcasting."

The MPTOA pronouncement began with the observation that "The motion picture industry is again face to face with the problem of competition of famous stars and screen personalities on radio programs." Quotation of the resolution passed on July 1st by the Kansas-Missouri organization followed. In conclusion President Kuykendall wrote: "The radio people claim that the drawing power of a screen star is enhanced and strengthened by broadcasting, that valuable advertising accrues to motion pictures through the publicity and exploitation given them by radio. Many theatre owners dispute this assertion. But radio is here to stay; whether they use screen talent promiscuously or not, they are going to put on the best and most appealing show they can. Just how much restraint or control is possible or practical is a difficult question, made doubly so by the personal right of every one to realize the maximum return on their own talent and ability."

FIRST REVIEW OF FIRST MARY ASTOR PICTURE

Speaking of Mary Astor, the first review of her first picture, "The Beggar Maid," Triarts production, appeared in the Motion Picture News since merged into Motion Picture Herald, in the issue of October 8, 1921. Her "personality and classic beauty," as well as "grace of movement," were noted in the review, which said:

"Unlike most beauty contest winners Miss Astor possesses much beside her good looks. She has a grace of movement, a faultless stage presence and that indefinite something that makes her image on the screen seem more than just a contrast in black and white against the silver sheet.

"The requirements of the part of the English maiden who is loved by the young lord of the manor, are few, especially as to the matter of real acting but as far as the role goes Miss Astor could not have been excelled by the most talented star the films have ever revealed."

'Heavy Demand' For Astor Films Reported 'Dream'

The latest dream of Hollywood reporters, as recorded by the United Press, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc., and by William Randolph Hearst's New York Evening Journal, is that Mary Astor and the studios which employ her will "reap a fortune from the publicity" out of a California courtroom, and that already film exchanges the country over are flooded with demands from exhibitors for prints of Mary Astor pictures.

Lloyd Pantages, whose Hollywood column in the amusement section of the Evening Journal sometimes has been under fire from the industry, and the United Press under a Hollywood date line both on Saturday said that Miss Astor's headline "breaks" of the last few weeks have created an enormous demand for her pictures among exhibitors and exchanges.

Sales managers and booking offices in New York City deny that any such rush exists for Astor vehicles and say that if any slight interest has been occasioned it is virtually inconspicuous.

"Film exchanges have been flooded for days," the United Press said, "by demands from theatres for 'anything with Astor in it.' Hollywood has found that exhibitors don't do that unless the customers are speaking. Samuel Goldwyn, producer who had Miss Astor working on 'Dodsworth' when her suit came to trial, ordered the film rushed for release Sept 15th, a month earlier than originally scheduled.

Similarly Lloyd Pantages based his report of a demand for Mary Astor pictures on the advancement of the release date for "Dodsworth."

Sheilah Graham, writing for the North American Newspaper Alliance, elaborated on the identical report. Using as her lead the same story that exhibitors were bombarding Mr. Goldwyn for an early release of "Dodsworth," she continued:

"While the question of Miss Astor's future on the screen is still in doubt, theatre owners feel that, at the moment, the general public is ready to flock in droves to movie palaces to see the woman whose friendships with world renowned celebrities have so publicized."

In contrast to these reports four companies which have produced pictures starring the actress since 1934 say they have felt no particular demand for her films from exhibitors or exchanges. At the office of A. Montague, sales executive for Columbia Pictures, it was said that bookings for "And So They Were Married," produced this year, have been normal. "No noticeable demand," was the report from the booking office for Warner Brothers and First National Pictures. "The Murder of Dr. Harrigan," "Man of Iron," "Page Miss Glory," "Easy to Love," "I Am a Thief," and "Return of the Terror," were made in the last three years by these companies.

F. J. A. McCarthy, eastern division sales manager for Universal Pictures, producer of "Straight From the Heart," said that he had heard reports from exchanges of a slight demand for old pictures starring Miss Astor. He said, however, that in his opinion the demand was only temporary and similar to that always felt after publicity breaks "such as the death of Rudolph Valentino." He added that the demand, such as it is, comes almost entirely from subsequent-run houses in the Times Square district of New York City which feature old pictures.

• THE SCREEN MARCHES ON into a new and greater "cycle" of vast, robust, heroic drama, apace with today's larger entertainment demands Charged with leadership in this advance is the company which during twenty-five years has been responsible for such other major innovations as talking pictures, musical pictures, anti-crime dramas, and topical "headline" stories. Now, inspired by the splendid public reception of such sincere and unusual recent attractions as their "Story of Louis Pasteur," "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and "The Green Pastures," WARNER BROS. will embark upon the new cinema season with a series of productions definitely planned to exceed all past efforts, filmed in studios specially enlarged for this expanded program. ENDING "EXPENSIVE EXPERIMENTS" IN SHOWMANSHIP FOR OLD METHODS

by KENNETH FORCE
in Kansas City

Expensive experiments in merchandising motion pictures to the public are being abandoned by one of their strongest circuit advocates, Fox Midwest Theatres, in favor of the old fundamentals of theatre operation. The circuit, which is owned by Twentieth Century-Fox-Chase Bank interests, and is operated by Skouras Brothers through National Theatres, comprises 120 properties in the agricultural country of Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska and Illinois—an area where crop as well as industrial fluctuations require sturdy exploitation methods at all times to fill theatre seats.

The idea is to cut loose immediately from those film exploitation methods whose actual value is a matter of debate, and to return to the tried-and-proved manner of promoting those phases of management and operation common to every theatre to the point where, Fox Midwest hopes, the service will distinguish the circuit houses in the public mind. A tangible plan with this in mind already has been adopted, and Elmer C. Rhoden, division manager in charge of the circuit, will engineer its adoption.

Feeling that pictures are good now and are continuing to improve, the Fox management believes it can safely turn to the promotion of its theatres. To sell one is to sell the other, but the effort for several years largely has been to sell the picture to the neglect of the theatre.

Urges Institutional Selling

The theme of "Super Service, a Plan to Make Fox Midwest Theatres Unique," was keynoted by Lon Cox, St. Louis district manager, for more than 100 managers and executives of Fox Midwest at the circuit's fifth annual convention, at Excelsior Springs, Mo., last week.

"Business is like friendship. It goes where it is best treated and stays where it is best served," Mr. Cox told the managers. "The shows we sell are no more entertaining in our theatres than in any other, unless people like our theatres better. Box office results depend just as much on good will and good service as they do on good shows. If your audiences are your friends, you and your theatre will continue to attract them regularly.

"Today the shows we sell week after week are no more entertaining on our screens than they are on the screens of the smallest theatre or town in the country," said Mr. Cox. "That is why we must go farther in the selling of our theatres than in the selling of our current attractions.

"The coming year will be one of service. Public utility advertisements that have appeared in your home town papers during the last year, you may have noticed, are strictly institutional ads designed to sell their effort as service for their customers. Again, the coal industry the past year has established extension bureaus to educate the public how to burn coal effectively and economically, even going so far as to make individual surveys as part of their sales promotion work.

"Screen Forecast" Manual

"Super service will take the form of such ideas as a 'Screen Forecast.' This illustrated booklet contains brief reviews of 25 outstanding attractions of the first quarter of the new season, with a check list on the back which patrons can mark and leave at the theatre or mail in. When the pictures are booked, the patron is notified in advance of the showing."

Another phase of the new service, "Newspaper Ads, Making the Most of the Space You Buy," was discussed by H. E. Jameyson, Wichita district manager. Highlights of Mr. Jameyson's "ad-vice" were these: "Good advertising is easier to produce than bad advertising because good advertising is simple advertising. Once you have learned the art of simplification, the task of preparing good advertising is not arduous, but enjoyable. Never start to prepare an ad until you have determined what you are trying to sell, then try to achieve those fundamentals in your layout: visibility, legibility and sales ability. When Bank Nights and giveaways are washed up, your ability as an advertising man is what will establish you as a successful theatre man. The time is coming when the theatre man who has trained himself in the preparation of good advertising will once again be the most sought-after individual in this business."

Saying Too Much

"If I were to make a general criticism of our advertising," said Mr. Jameyson, "I would say that too many men are trying to engrave the Lord's Prayer upon a grain of wheat. This is particularly true since we have reduced the space we are using in newspapers. Also, it is particularly true where we are using double bills, and where we have to advertise two pictures in the space we formerly used for one. Too many managers are trying to say too much in their ads."

Development of super service through "Civic Contacts" was the theme of Fred C. Souttar, manager of the Lincoln theatre, Belleville, Ill.

"Civic contacts are the diplomatic department of your theatre," Mr. Souttar said, "and are every bit as important to the successful operation of a theatre as your advertising.

"Take an active part in a leading luncheon club. Don't join the first club that offers you a chance; be sure you join one of the best ones. The sooner you are able to call the leading business men by their first names the sooner you are going to be able to accomplish something really worth while.

"The greatest way to win friends with the schools is through benefit shows.

"I should like to stress the importance of being careful in the selection of pictures for school and other organization benefits. Be sure you've got the right kind of a show for them. If you haven't, tell them so. They'll wait. Don't be afraid of losing them. And when you do tell them that a program is O. K.—then they'll believe you.

"Your libraries go hand in hand with the schools as an important civic contact. Every now and then drop in and see the chief librarian.

"One type of organization, though, that every smart theatre manager will steer clear of are political organizations. Politics and theatre operations don't mix."

Getting "Super Service"

How to get super service was the subject of two talks.

"Hire the right people, place responsibility in the right people, keep them all working together harmoniously for the common good, and discipline will take care of itself," said J. Roy Burford, manager of the Fox Hutchinson (Kansas) theatres."

"This new idea is to make every employee a showman," said Ray McLain, manager of the Granada theatre, Emporia, Kan., who discussed staff meetings. "If an employee doesn't show signs of developing into a showman, then that employee should be replaced. . . . Any manager who doesn't have a regular, well-organized and enthusiastic staff meeting is robbing his box-office of many dollars."

"If we cannot make money by spending money for any item, then it is bad management to buy that item," Theo. P. Davis, manager of the Grand and Fourth Street, Moberly, Mo., told the managers in a talk

CONTRAST CALLED KEY TO PROGRAM BALANCE

"The make-up of a show can be planned according to definite principles that have been sure-fire stuff for ages because they are based upon an understanding of human psychology," Stanley N. Chambers, manager of the Kansas City Uptown, said in addressing the convention of Fox Midwest Theatres.

"Every artist whose work has survived him, whether he painted, composed music, or wrote literature, has depended upon one thing to give his work balance, harmony and rhythm. That thing is contrast."

CEA Group Ends Tour, Sails Home

The Cinematic Exhibitors Association delegation which has been touring the United States for the past month or so on a goodwill tour which extended as far west as the Hollywood studios, sailed for England and home from New York on the Normandie Wednesday morning convinced that British exhibitors are paying far more in film rentals than their fellow theatre operators in this country.

Admittedly having visited few theatres because of the tightness of their crowded itinerary, important members of the delegation nevertheless asserted before sailing that they had discovered average film costs here run about 25 per cent as compared with 40 or slightly above in their country.

Among their disturbances, already reflected in stories from London, is the manner in which the cost of film is rising in England. In this country, all distributors, whether or not American or British, were described as of "the same breed." The inference was that a way will be sought to curb the practice.

Arthur Taylor, secretary of the London and Home Counties Branch, who acted as sort of general manager for the party, declared a third concern had to do with the lack of product of direct appeal to juvenile audiences. "In the silent days, serials and fast-moving action pictures were a constant delight to children, and British exhibitors generally, therefore, ran special kiddies' matinees. With the advent of dialogue which tended to slow down action and the certificate system to designate pictures for adults and otherwise in vogue in England, we have found out future audiences are not being developed because those audiences, as children, have fallen out of the habit of going to theatres. I mentioned this to Will Hays when he greeted us in Hollywood, but the matter was not pursued," he said.

Philadelphia Unit Merger Held Near

Members of the Independent Theatre Owners and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Philadelphia moved nearer a merger this week. The two groups will meet to ratify or reject the recommendations of the joint committee on merging and if the ratification goes through, as predicted, representatives of both organizations will meet next week to arrange final plans for the merging.

Meanwhile, convention activities will hum in Denver next week when three different gatherings are scheduled. Rick Ricketson, manager of Fox Rocky Mountain, will hold his annual gathering with managers August 26-27. Theatre Owners' Association of the Rocky Mountain Region will hold their first convention August 27 and the annual gathering sponsored by the exchanges will be held at the Cherry Hills Country Club.

At White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., the annual convention of the Exhibitors and Managers Association of West Virginia was featured by discussions of various trade topics at the Greenbrier Hotel this week.

Return to Old Showmanship

leak is tomorrow's big hole. Have the little leak fixed today. Before a manager can teach employees the economical way to do things, he must learn himself. If you waste $100 in controllable expense, you must take in $200 more at the box office to compensate for the waste."

In discussing "Booking a Show," Ed J. Shanberg, district manager, pointed out that "the deals a film buyer makes are only as good as the booking and playing of the film make them."

Balancing a Show

"Balancing a show is easy to say, but hard to do," Stanley N. Chambers, Uptown manager, Kansas City, brought out.

He suggested that the manager first know his show. "Screen the entire program in advance, or read up on it in the trade papers. Second, arrange the units to contrast with each other. Third, spot your trailers at the points of greatest interest; break them up; make sure each date strip is crystal clear. Fourth, sit through your entire first performance; study your reaction and that of your audience. Fifth, cut and reassemble until the show goes exactly as you want it. It's worth the effort."

"If my booking sheet showed a news, a scenic, a cartoon, a dramatic feature and four trailers, for instance, I would suggest, offhand, without exact knowledge of what my subjects contained, an arrangement like this: scenic, trailer, cartoon, trailer, news, trailer, feature."

Copies of the talks were printed as a manual on the fundamentals of theatre operation, and sent to each employee of Fox Midwest theatres, more than 900 of them in the 97 theatres operated by the circuit in Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and Illinois.

Philippines Adopt Production Code

The board of censors of the Philippine Islands has adopted the Production Code as used in this country, as the official standard for judging and censoring films in the islands, it was learned this week.

The board acted on the recommendation of a special committee composed of Father William A. Fletcher, private secretary to Archbishop Michael O'Doherty; Dr. Jorge Bocobo, president of the University of the Philippines, and Dr. David S. Hibbard, ex-president of Silliman Institute. The committee chose the code after studying various systems of regulations in other countries.

RKO Canadian Deal Delayed

Although contracts have been drawn for the leasing of the RKO theatres in Ottawa, Winnipeg, Vancouver, St. Johns and Montreal to Famous Players Canadian for 15 years, signatures are being held up until M. Bolstad, attorney for the Canadian circuit, returns to Montreal.

RKO Retiring Final $850,000 Of Gold Notes

RKO will retire the last of its $6,000,000 issue of secured gold notes amounting to $850,000 under a proposed plan which, if approved by the federal court in New York, will result in the surrender by the trustee for the notes of virtually all of the RKO assets. These assets were pledged as collateral when the gold notes were issued in 1931. Federal Judge John W. Clancy Tuesday signed an order setting a hearing on the proposed payment for September 2.

Chemical Bank & Trust Co. is trustee for the notes and holds the collateral securing them. The Bank of America National Ass'n recently acquired the balance of the notes outstanding from Consolidated Film Industries, which acquired them several years earlier. Under the plan for which court approval is sought, RKO Radio Pictures would pay $850,000 to Chemical, which, in turn, would retire the notes held by the Giannini bank and surrender the collateral to the Irving Trust Co., trustee in reorganization for RKO.

The collateral securing the notes includes practically all of the stock held by RKO in its going subsidiaries and the obligations of those subsidiaries to the parent company.

The original 1931 issue of $6,000,000 had been reduced to $1,825,000 outstanding at the time of the RKO receivership in January, 1933. The obligation was further reduced to its present $850,000 outstanding since that time. It comprises one of the principal secured debts of the company, except for the RKO debentures, and its retirement at this time is viewed as indicative of the improved financial status of RKO and subsidiary companies.

Blumenstock Succeeds Shuford at Warner's

Stanley Shuford resigned this week as advertising manager of Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and on September 1 is to start new duties as executive vice-president of the Biow Agency and general assistant to Milton Biow, president.

Mort Blumenstock, formerly assistant to Joseph Bernhard, in charge of the Warner theatre circuit, has been named to succeed Mr. Shuford.

Harry Goldberg of the Warner Philadelphia theatres will take Mr. Blumenstock's place in the theatre organization and Jules Seltzer will have Mr. Goldberg's post in Philadelphia under the new arrangement announced.

Theatre Premium Company Charges Contract Breach

A suit for $350,000 damages was filed in the federal court of New York Tuesday by the Price Theatre Premium Corporation against the Fifth Avenue Sales Corporation alleging breach of contract and conspiracy. Harry A. Abrams and William L. Sincere are named as co-defendants.

SHAKESPEARE BACK ON BROADWAY UNDER GLARE OF HOLLYWOOD ARCS

Fourteen Two-a-Day Engagements of "Romeo and Juliet" Prefaced by Premiere This Week at Astor on Broadway

Paced by an advertising and exploitation campaign of record size and characterized by many outstanding innovations, Irving Thalberg's MGM roadshow production of "Romeo and Juliet" is now definitely set for its first 14 two-a-day engagements.

At the Astor theatre, New York, the Shakespearean love story, starring Norma Shearer and Leslie Howard under direction of George Cukor, was to have its world premiere this Thursday evening. The other bookings making up the picture's first 14 roadshow engagements are as follows: Chestnut Opera House, Philadelphia, August 30; Erlanger Theatre, Chicago, August 30; Colonial Theatre, Boston, August 30; National Theatre, Washington, September 6; Nixon Theatre, Pittsburgh, September 6; Hanna Theatre, Cleveland, September 6; Geary Theatre, San Francisco, September 6; Cass Theatre, Detroit, September 6; His Majesty's Theatre, Montreal, September 13; Maryland Theatre, Baltimore, September 20; American Theatre, St. Louis, September 27; Erlanger Theatre, Buffalo, October 4; and Royal Alexander Theatre, Toronto, October 5.

For the first time William R. Ferguson of the MGM exploitation department, working under supervision of Howard Dietz, has arranged to place three exploitation experts at each of the key city spots. Experienced men will be brought in from other territories to co-operate with district exploiteers, and thus will gain the advantage of taking back with them immediate practical training from the merchandising of "Ziegfeld."

The exploitation staff in Philadelphia will consist of Norman Pyle, C. Duffus and Mark Wilson; in Chicago, F. Bartow, M. Abrams and C. Morris; in Boston, B. Mackenzie, J. Depesa and J. Saxe; in Washington, Norman Pyle and two assistants; in Cleveland, C. C. Deardourff and two assistants; in Detroit, W. G. Bishop and two assistants; in Pittsburgh, J. E. Watson, Jack Gilmore and one other exploiteer; in Montreal, H. Moss and W. Colman; in Toronto, E. Rawley, W. Coleman and one other. Further assignments are being made.

Lecturer and Contact

Not only will each roadshow engagement thus be flanked by the coordinate support of a trio of experienced promotion workers, but there will also be a special lecturer and a woman contacting societies and educational institutions in every first-run spot.

A special 20-page "study guide" has been prepared by the MGM home office and 25,000 of these are being sent to schools in every part of the country, also some abroad, tying up the film with the reading of Shakespearean plays.

In addition, five thousand sets of large-size stills, showing actual Veronese backgrounds of "Romeo" and research undertaken at the Metro studios, have been distributed to libraries and schools, and they have given unanimous consent to put on display the complete record of the filming of the photoplay. Much of the ground for this educational campaign was plowed last winter and spring during the countrywide tour of Barrett Kiesling, who worked in close cooperation with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America and with the various local groups and women's clubs allied to it.

A special Metro representative was sent to a national meeting of collegiate public relations counsels in Boston, and this group promised support, in every way, to local screenings of "Romeo and Juliet."

Tieup with French Line

One of the biggest contests will be the MGM tieup with the French Line, through which two trips to Stratford-on-Avon and one to Hollywood, plus more than a thousand special prizes, will be given the public. This illustrated essay contest is being conducted on the basis of three groups: (1) high schools, (2) colleges, and (3) women's clubs, with individual prizes being awarded in each category. A special "contest guide," copiously illustrated with scenes from the picture, has been prepared by the MGM home office for distribution on a wholesale scale.

PLANS BIBLE CLASS TIEUPS FOR THEATRES

Louis Rosenbluh, head of National Studios, is formulating plans for Sunday all-creed Bible classes to be held in connection with showings of slides made from Matthew Merian's "Story of the Bible Told in Pictures". National Studios has been granted the exclusive rights to reproduce the slides and they will be made available to exhibitors for "spiritual entertainment".

It is planned either to have lecturers give running descriptions of the Merian story direct from the stage or else arrange for the narrative to be picked up from disc recordings. Mr. Rosenbluh, announcing the tentative plans for the Bible classes, said: "With productions like 'The Green Pastures' having made their impression on the general public, avenues are opened to the theatre owner to do something toward helping his patrons of all sects to appreciate the inspiring background of the Bible." The theatre owner is also placed in the position of helping to serve his community."

Pete Woodhull Is Dead; Former Exhibitor Leader

Raymond Frank (Pete) Woodhull, known to motion pictures for two decades, principally in exhibition, died unexpectedly Wednesday morning at his home in the town of Dover, New Jersey, where he was born 56 years ago. He had been on Broadway the day before. A heart attack caused his death.

Funeral services will be conducted Saturday, at his home, on North Sussex street, Dover, and interment will be in Locust Hills Cemetery, Dover.

After sixteen years in industrials and banking, with United States Express Company, National Broadway Bank, Dover Trust Company, Metropolitan Life Insurance and Swift meat packers, all in the vicinity of his native northern New Jersey, Mr. Woodhull went into exhibition, managing the old Baker theatre, in 1918, at Dover. The death of William H. Baker resulted in Mr. Woodhull's appointment as executor of the Baker estate, and in 1926, as the owner, he sold the house to Stanley-Fabian, part of the nucleus of the growing Warner-Stanley Circuit.

Three terms as president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey brought Mr. Woodhull to the attention of national exhibitor organization politics, and in 1924, at Milwaukee, he was elected president of the parent Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. He served for two years, and late in 1926 he was recalled to fill the unexpired term of Eli Whitney Collins, winning re-election at the Columbus convention, in 1927, and again at Toronto, in 1928.

Mr. Woodhull, near the end of his official service in the cause of organized exhibition, became personally interested in theatre operation, with Joseph W. Walsh and Ralph Griffing, at Danbury, Conn. An avocation was participation in local politics.

He was almost always on hand at important exhibitor gatherings, where he admittedly held the record for the longest speeches. Few important national committees of the MPTOA were named without Mr. Woodhull's strenuous participation.

Last year Mr. Woodhull engaged in the publication of Picture Business, a weekly paper of exhibitor comment. He suspended publication in the spring.

Mr. Woodhull was a 32nd Degree Mason, a member and former officer of the Dover Rotary Club, past exalted ruler and honorary life member of the Elks, an honorary life member of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, and a Shriner.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Evelyn Woodhull; a son, Robert; his mother, Mrs. Mary Estelle Woodhull; a sister, Miss Nina Woodhull, and a brother, Horace, of Honolulu.

EXHIBITORS READY FOR FIGHT FILM THIS TIME

Theatres Book Louis - Sharkey Pictures After Deluge of Patrons on Schmeling Bout

Several weeks ago Max Schmeling, former heavyweight boxing champion of the world, exploded with a right hand punch the myth that was Joe Louis at the Yankee Stadium in New York before a large audience. The thousands who composed the audience that evening were but a handful compared to the hundreds of thousands who immediately swept down on the few box-offices scattered throughout the country which had booked the film record of what was termed the greatest "sport upset of the past decade."

Caught in the avalanche of customers were the exhibitors, especially those who had refused to gamble by booking the picture before the fight came off. These exhibitors had been offered the film by Jack Dietz of New York at a flat rental for a week, and for some time before the battle his salesmen went begging. But, 24 hours after the German had left the Negro on his knees, draped across the lower strands of the ring ropes in the middle of the 12th round, it was the exhibitor who was begging—this time to be allowed to show the film. Most of them got their wish, but it cost them at least three times more than it would have if they had taken the picture before the fight just a day earlier.

No Regrets

There were no regrets, however, on the part of the exhibitors, and certainly not by Mr. Dietz. He had bought the film rights from Michael Strauss Jacobs, ticket-broker, fight promoter and custodian of Jacobs' Beach, that pugilistic stretch of New York's 49th Street where the great, near-great and has-beens of the prize ring now assemble. Mr. Jacobs received $25,000 from Mr. Dietz, who set up four regular cameras, one slow motion camera and in addition had to make out pay checks for technicians, electricians and meet the costs of prints and distribution. It is estimated that 800 prints were made in the three laboratories which were utilized, at a cost of about $40 a print, or $32,000 for that item. All told, Mr. Dietz spent in the neighborhood of $90,000 to get the pictures and prepare them for the market.

From that point on he sat back and filled orders, and they are still coming in, as witness the re-booking of the picture this week by the United Detroit Theatres for one week.

The average fight picture grosses between $150,000 and $200,000. But the Schmeling-Louis film was not an average one, and it is reported to have grossed more than the fight itself. The Yankee Stadium total was in the neighborhood of $700,000.

Mr. Dietz again is receiving exhibitors this week in his office at 723 Seventh Avenue, New York, because he closed another deal with Mr. Jacobs, this time to film the fight between Joe Louis and Jack Sharkey, another ex-heavyweight champion of the world. The RKO theatres were the first to sign for the picture, as they were for those of Mr. Louis' last fight, and again they hope to be among the first to reap the harvest that is now being sown by motion picture versions of prize fights.

The exhibitor learned his lesson last month and is profiting by it, reports indicate. Mr. Dietz' salesmen were having no difficulty selling their wares this time, although it was not expected that the gross of the Louis-Sharkey picture would approximate that of the Schmeling-Louis film.

Despite Federal Law

All of this traffic in fight pictures was being carried on in the face of the Sims federal law against fight films, enacted July 31, 1912, and the history of which was discussed by Terry Ramsaye on the HERALD'S editorial page in the issue of July 25, 1936. Joe Louis is credited with being the real attraction of today's pictures, even in defeat, and it was a member of his race, one Jack Johnson, who so aroused public indignation by his public and private life in and about Chicago following his defeat of Jim Jeffries that the Sims Bill resulted.

Mr. Dietz, as distributor of the fight films, is having his share of legal actions, but these are of a local nature. Actions have been brought by Oliver Film Corporation, a stockholder in Madison Square Garden, and former distributor of motion picture versions of New York's biggest fights. The court cases have their origin in the fact that Mr. Jacobs is promoting the coming battle between Max Schmeling and Champion James J. Braddock in conjunction with Madison Square Garden. The Garden has sold film rights to past events to Oliver Corporation, but Mr. Jacobs already has sold Mr. Dietz the privilege of filming the Schmeling-Braddock battle. Oliver Corporation claims it is entitled to film the fight, when and if it takes place, now that Champion Braddock has asked for a postponement because of a broken finger.

The courts have the entire matter under consideration at present, and a decision as to who will distribute the fight picture is expected late this week.

Film Law Revision Sought in Mexico

The Mexican Government is discussing a new film law under which Mexican pictures would get preferential playing time and theatres playing Mexican pictures would pay a lower tax. First run theatres in Mexico City pay a daily tax to the Government ranging from 642 pesos to 100 pesos. The peso's exchange value is 28 cents but in Mexico City it will purchase the equivalent of a dollar in United States money.

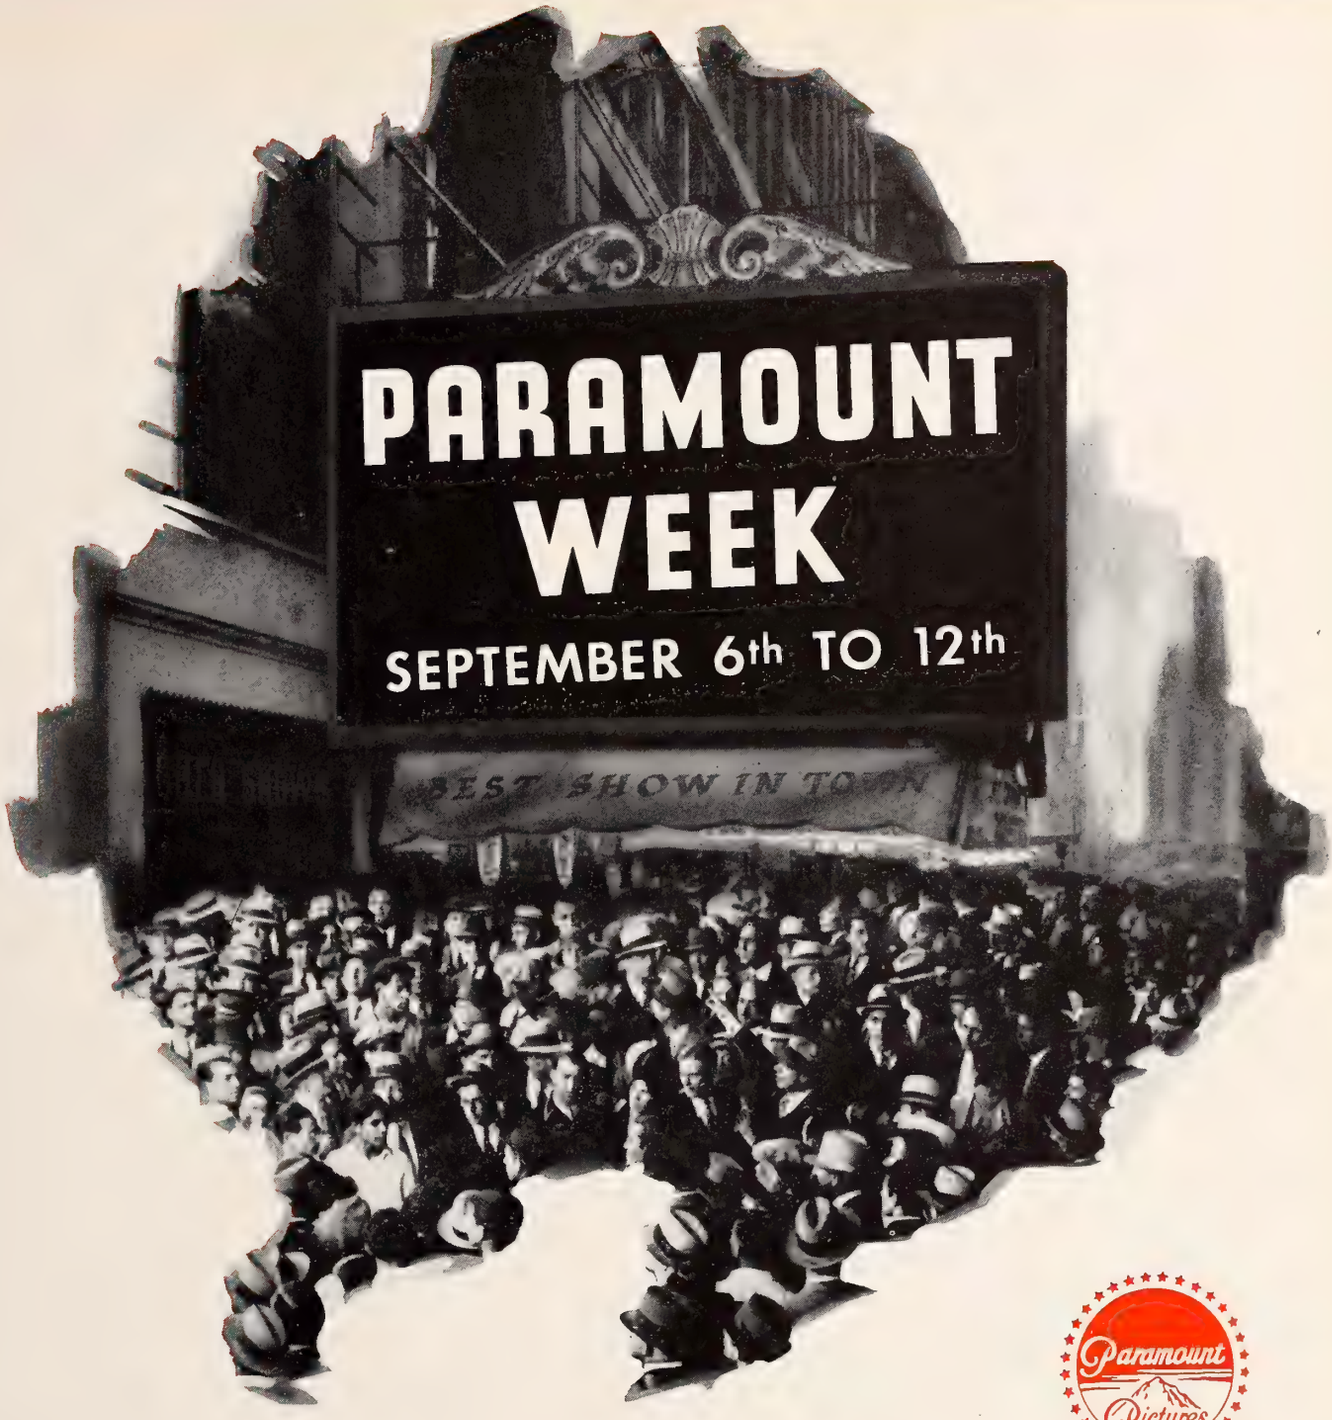
Mrs. Fox Loses Her Fight Over Company's Books

All-Continent Corporation charges concealed motives and bad faith in its answer to the petition of Hiram Steelman, trustee in the William Fox bankruptcy now being heard in Atlantic City, who asked that the All-Continent books be turned over to him for examination and audit.

Former Circuit Judge Clarence L. Cole, counsel for Mrs. Eva Fox, head of All-Continent and wife of the bankrupt, filed the answer brief late last week with Federal Referee Robert E. Steedle, who, nevertheless, on Tuesday, ordered that all books and records of All-Continent be turned over to Hiram Steelman, trustee in the bankruptcy. Mr. Steedle concluded that transfers of property in the family, where such a transfer subsequently seeks the benefit of the bankruptcy, "should be subjected to the utmost scrutiny and investigation." A further notice of appeal by Mrs. Fox is expected.

In 1930, William Fox had more than $18,000,000. Late that year he turned over securities to the All-Continent Corporation for $6,000,000 which had cost him $14,000,000 and, in the following year, deeded the new corporation over to his wife and daughters as a trust.

Creditors insisted, however, that this action was in effect a sham and that the All-Continent Corporation is in fact a Fox asset which should be available for distribution to his creditors.



Mr. Cole declared that neither Mr. Steelman nor the creditors have any legal right to an order turning over the books. He insisted that through questioning Herbert Leitsteen, Fox family bookkeeper, the creditors have already obtained the records of "at least 85 per cent of all the transactions the company has ever had. It is fair to assume that by pursuing their present method of investigation, before long they will have obtained a record from the All-Continent books of every transaction with Mr. Fox.

"No fraud on the part of either the bankrupt or All-Continent Corp. is alleged and certainly none has been established. Fox has been under subpoena for weeks but has not yet been examined, and no opportunity has been given him to explain what counsel for the trustee has referred to as significant or suspicious.

"Everything to date definitely indicates that the legitimate purposes of the trustee and counsel for the creditors can be fully served by the present form of examination. We are forced to conclude that the application is made for an ulterior purpose."

Bobby Breen Pictures To Be Made As Class A

As a result of the success of Bobby Breen's first starring vehicle, "Let's Sing Again," Sol Lesser, president of Principal Productions, has announced that all future productions starring the child actor will be made as Class A specials. The production budget for his next, "Rainbow Over the River," has been doubled.

AMERICANS IN FRANCE FACE NEW THREATS AGAINST FILM BUSINESS

Two Plans to Protect French Industry—Both Call for Reduction of Imports and Increased Costs to Foreigners

by PIERRE AUTRE
in Paris

In one month the American cinema industry in France has seen more dangerous menaces to its future than in years. To protect the French industry various official organizations are trying to make the Government adopt drastic measures against foreign films.

The trades-unions of the Motion Picture, (Syndicat General du Cinema), a part of the "Confédération Générale du Travail," in their plan for reorganization of the French business, ask for "limitation of all foreign pictures and a national monopoly for the distribution in France of foreign pictures." Their plan was published in the daily newspaper Le Peuple, official organ of the CGT. Arrival of the Popular Front Government, in which the CGT has a big influence, has put into light the plan established by the Cinema Trade-Unions.

Meeting with the Minister of National Economy, M. Spinasse, presiding, the Conseil National Economic has adopted unanimously a report presented by a financial inspector, M. de Carmoy, calling for measures against foreign pictures.

In official circles one is given to understand that measures against foreign films are considered the first logical act with which to help the French Cinema Industry.

The Trades Unions Plan

Following are details of the Trades Unions plan:

The Syndicat General Du Cinema, including various workers, from directors to projectionists, extras and ushers, considers that the French industry is no longer an organ of artistic and educational propaganda and loses by this fact its social aims.

The Syndicate holds that the French industry is entirely in the service of the money power and mainly in the hands of speculators. Directors, technicians and players see their working conditions made worse and patrons find the quality of productions weakened. They ask for an urgent and comprehensive examination of the situation.

They want a full reorganization of the industry made by the State under control of the workers in the industry and patrons of the theatres.

They offer the following program:

(A) Immediate measures which would give to the cinema industry the minimum of vitality necessary to the safety of employees.

(B) Other measures aiming to make the cinema industry a national institution under the control of the State and devoted to the interests of the people as a whole.

Several concrete proposals are offered to apply at once while a general reorganization is being made. These include:

(a) Collection of Theatre Receipts

A percentage of theatre receipts, to go to producers and eventually to the directors, technicians and authors, would be collected daily at the box offices. This would secure to the producers and to those financing production controllable return of money. This, it is felt by the proponents, would bring back the necessary confidence for production financing.

(b) Limitation of "Dubbed" Pictures

The present system of quotas would be supplanted by a plan fixing the number of pictures allowed for dubbing. A decree would establish a "dubbing license" (licence de doublage) with a footage fee equalizing the cost of any average French picture (about 100 francs a meter, or $2.00 a foot).

The definition of a French film given in the report is: "A film produced in French studios by technicians working under the conditions which rule the Cinema industry in France."

A dubbed picture gives work to 15 persons during two weeks. Dubbing of a picture costs about 200,000 francs while an average French picture costs one million francs at least.

The trades unionists say the prices of the dubbed pictures warp the exhibition market and stop all serious possibility of development of French production.

(c) Reduction of Entertainment Taxes

A decree would grant an important reduction, or possibly complete elimination, of entertainment taxes to all exhibitors who allot half of their program time to pictures produced in France, or who show pictures made in France for at least 25 weeks of the year.

(d) Organization of the Industry

1. Rates paid by producers to distributors would be limited, also the number of intermediaries between producers and exhibitors.

It would be forbidden to rent parts of programs, as this would remove control of the receipts in the theatres. Pictures for a program would have to be booked from the same distributor. At the same time, block-booking and blind-booking would be forbidden.

There would be a single organization for distributing French pictures in France and foreign countries.

FRENCH TRADE UNIONS' FILM PLAN

2. Establishment of special taxes on "excessive" salaries. These taxes would go in part to the unemployed workers' funds and in part to the professional teaching funds.

Taxes on the salaries of stars would be 50 per cent on salaries exceeding 100,000 francs (6,666) for one film.

Taxes on excessive wages paid to film directors.

Taxes on benefices made by some producing companies (when these benefices are over 30 per cent of the investment).

3. Establishment of an employment office for workers and artists.

Creation of "an official professional card."

Creation of a "producer's license."

4. Establishment and application of official "contrats-types" (standard contracts) for all kinds of workers.

5. Publication of a decree which would oblige all film producers to guarantee payment of wages to the staff working on a film production. Producers could not start a picture before depositing with a bank a sum of money representing in whole or in part the wages of those engaged in the production. (The minimum would be the money corresponding to the legal notices granted in each kind of work.)

6. More effective application of the "8-hour day" law.

(a) To reduce unemployment, all overtime would be prohibited. Rising wages would be investigated.

(b) When the directors, technicians and artists (not paid by hour) are working more than 8 hours a day, extra payment would be made.

7. Safety and hygiene.

The studios and laboratories would have the same rules of safety and hygiene as the theatres.

8. Establishment and publication of a General Statute of the Cinema Industry. The following measures may be adopted to that end:

1. Foundation of a credit organization to permit the functioning of co-operative producing concerns, including groups of technicians, artists and workers.

2. Creation of a committee which would select stories of "public interest," calculated to meet the general needs of film entertainment and education. Censorship would be suppressed. The committee would include representatives of the various professions.

3. Establishment of a control organization of scripts by the patrons themselves. They would be elected by region and could refuse financial backing for productions from scripts considered in opposition to the general interests of the nation.

4. Formation of production teams which would propose stories to the committees and would put them into production after acceptance by these committees.

5. Creation of national studios and raw stock factories.

6. Monopoly for distribution of foreign pictures in France.

7. Partial or complete nationalization of exhibition.

Such, then, is the plan formulated by the trade unions, first formulated a year ago. One may note that some parts of this plan have not yet been applied in establishment of the collective contract following the strike which paralyzed the industry for two weeks.

Overtime has been abolished and wages have been increased.

The unions want the industry nationalized, and the Government of the Popular Front (with Socialists in the majority) agrees entirely, at least theoretically. This plan never has been published in any French trade publication. It is certain that the unions aim to put all the provisions into effect, one by one.

Less work, more money, is the general idea.

Other provisions are more difficult to effect without breaking down all existing organization. Collection of money in the theatres, drastic litigation of dubbed pictures and foreign imports, taxations on benefices, and so on, are not yet established.

The Government, and even the trade unions, seem to prefer the recommendations in the report of Mr. de Carmoy as financial investigator for the Conseil National Economique.

This report, covering 100 typewritten pages, was written after consulting the leading men of the French film industry, as follows:

M. Petsche, Deputy, secretary of the cinema sub-commission of the finance commission of the Chamber of Deputies.

M. Gandera, president, Syndical Union of Film Producers.

M. Lourau, president, Syndical Union of Film Distributors.

M. Lussiez, president, French Syndicate of Cinema Exhibitors.

M. Delac, president, Syndical Chamber of the French Cinema.

M. Vandal, president, Syndicate of Producers of French Films.

M. Ambiehl, president, Syndicate of Distributors of French Films.

M. Roger Weil, president, Syndicate of French Motion Picture Theatres.

M. Charles Méré, president, Society of Auteurs et Compositeurs Dramatiques.

M. Moignard, secretary, Inter-Professional Committee of the Motion Picture.

M. Charles Burguet, president, Syndical Chamber of Film Authors.

M. André Berthomieux, president, National Federation of French Film Workers.

M. Harry James, president, French syndicate of players and employees working on "dubbing."

M. Cebron, secretary, Federation du Spectacle (trades unions representative).

M. Martinnelli, president, Artists' union.

M. Daniel Norman, president, Alliance Artistique.

M. Latapie, president, Photographers and Cameramen Reporters Association.

Report in Three Divisions

M. de Carmoy's report is divided into three main parts. The first part concerns the present situation of the French industry. The second reviews the various foreign cinema organizations, especially in the United States, United Kingdom, Germany and Italy. The third concerns proposals for reorganization of the French industry. The conclusions follow:

The French film industry for several years has not been getting back the amount of money spent for production. This loss is borne almost entirely by the industry itself, with the exception of such branches as developing and printing factories, and makers of materials.

The production branch is hardest hit. This situation arises not only from the decrease of receipts in the theatres, but also from excessive costs of production through lack of responsible capital and expensive systems for getting money for production.

The average cost of a French feature, says M. de Carmoy, is one million and a half francs ($100,000). Expenses of production in 1932, with 159 pictures made, were 235,000,000 francs; in 1933 with 143 pictures, 233,000,000 francs; in 1934 with 126 films, 189,000,000 francs.

Plan for Reorganization

The Conseil National Economique is asking for drastic measures for recovery of the industry, with the state intervening in cases where the industry is unable to make the changes itself. These proposed measures concern organization, custom protection, taxation and organization of credit.

(1) Reorganization

Creation of a single organization of Syndical Chambers. There would be only one Trade Federation, with sub-federations of producers, distributors, exhibitors, studio owners, developing and printing factories, owners, and others. This organization, whose decisions would be controlled and recognized by the State, would have many important occupations: limitation of pictures for general release, limitation of new theatres, control of theatre receipts, judgment of the quality of foreign films imported.

If this organization cannot be established soon, a state decree would institute a Comite Central du Cinema, which would have the same duties.

A special license would be required for exports.

Interdicton of moral safety of employees.

Organization for safety of workers, improvement of conditions of work, better wages.

Censorship visas for French films, to be predicated upon the depositing by the producer of an amount of money representing the wages of the production staff.

(2) Customs Protection

Reduction of the quota of dubbed pictures from foreign countries by at least 25 per cent.

INDIAN DANCER TO STAR IN FILM

by K. G. GIDWANEY

in Karachi, India

Uday Shanker, Indian dancer of note, will be featured by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in a picture to be titled "Lives of a Dancer". Mrs. Enakshi Bhavnani is to be co-starred in the same picture. Patronized by Indian royalty from childhood because of his artistic precocity, Uday Shanker has been called "Culture Ambassador of the East".

Mrs. Bhavnani, the first Indian society girl to break the barriers of orthodoxy by acting in pictures, was graduated from Queen Mary's College, Madras, taking her M.A. degree after special courses in Indian and western music. She interrupted a successful career as a stage dancer to play the heroine, Mumtaz, in "Shiraz", European produced picture. She later played in "Vasentena" and "Entrapped".

CARMOY PLAN FOR FRENCH FILMS

picture in a definite time after the censorship visa.

Retention of the existing customs rate, which is 20 per cent ad valorem on printed films but an increase by four times of the admitted value of these films.

Fixing of about the same import tax on printed negatives and positives, as an incentive to foreign distributors to bring negatives into France, which would give work to the printing laboratories.

Free importation of sequences made in other countries for films being produced in France.

A special tax on dubbed pictures. This would be 25,000 francs ($1,666) for each foreign feature dubbed in French. The revenue would go into a national fund for French production.

The quota idea, as in Great Britain, was rejected by M. de Carmoy because it required a constant control of the theatres and the pictures shown, as well as production of "quota pictures" or "quickies."

National production would be reduced in case curtailment of imported pictures alone would not solve the problem.

(3) Reduction or Elimination of the Special Entertainments Taxes

(4) Credit Organization

Establishment of a financial organization called Caisse Centrale de L'Industrie Cinematographique, a central credit bank, which would control the various branches of the industry from studio to exhibition. This would protect the banks granting credit to the producers.

Constitution of a fund which would allow a team of directors and workers to make pictures themselves without producing companies.

(5) Temporary Solutions

These propositions made by the Conseil National Economique are not in agreement with the recent Franco-American trade treaty. For instance, this treaty does not permit increased tariffs and taxation. It does not permit reduction of the quota of foreign pictures imported. It does not allow establishment of a quota system and a special French taxation on dubbed pictures. However, the Conseil National Economique hopes that, when the Franco-American agreement is to be renewed, clauses concerning the cinema industry will be revived.

For a year, said M. de Carmoy, the French film industry and the French market have been under the power of the foreign producers. In the Franco-American Treaty advantages were obtained for some branches of the French industries at the expense of the French film industry, he said. Solutions given by the Conseil National Economique, he claimed, would improve the quality of French pictures, increase receipts, and would help French production. But all such recovery depends on limitation of imports.

On July 18 the Conseil National Economique, at a meeting presided over by M. Spinasse, minister of National Economy, adopted M. de Carmoy's report, unanimously.

It is likely that this report will be considered by the Government.

The Conseil National Economique has 47 members representing various groups—the public, employers and capital. It is certain that its activities will become more important under the Government of M. Léon Blum.

The plan of M. de Carmoy is general, that of the trades unions is essentially socialistic, with nationalizaton its goal. At present the unions plan is being kept under cover, as it seems easier to obtain the approval of employers and employees for M. de Carmoy's report.

HITLER'S RIEFENSTAHL WATCHING U. S. REELS

Publication two weeks ago in Motion Picture Herald of an account of how Adolph Hitler, through Leni Riefenstahl, his actress friend, is controlling the coverage of Olympic Games in Berlin by American newsreels was followed this week by a wireless dispatch to the New York Times from that paper's Berlin's correspondent, Frederick T. Birchall, describing further how Herr Hitler and Miss Riefenstahl are keeping a first-hand check on the newsreels to make certain that the Hitler decree, which virtually makes U. S. reels advertise Germany, is adhered to. Mr. Birchall's wireless report follows:

This is a sacrilege and should only be whispered. A woman has been in the Olympic Village! She is Leni Riefenstahl, director of the organization which produces the Nazi party's propaganda films. She is now directing the making of an Olympic film and her word is law in the matter of all picture-taking anywhere at the games. Any camera man who puts himself anywhere that Miss Riefenstahl thinks he should not be is swiftly approached by an attendant who hands him a pink slip. It says in effect:

"Remove yourself immediately from where you are now—Riefenstahl."

Receipt of two such slips in one day means permanent removal of the offender, forcibly if necessary.

Rules, however, are not for Miss Riefenstahl. At Los Angeles the Olympic Village was a male preserve which no female person might enter. In the days of the original games a female would have been quietly taken outside the sacred precincts of Olympia and invited to drink a bowl of hemlock. This must be a gentler age.

Furthermore, this Olympic film is to be propaganda for Germany. That word is open sesame to all doors in the Reich.

France Names Theatre Head

Premier Leon Blum's Leftist government this week injected modernist blood into the management of the staid old national theatres with the appointment of Edouard Bourdet, whose play "The Captive" was withdrawn from the Broadway stage, as manager of the Comedie-Francaise. He is expected to bring a livelier boulevard touch to the theatre's playbills.

James Rouche, manager of the opera, was given control over the Opera-Comique, which recently was the scene of an occupational strike of singers and stagehands.

But more significant was the appointment of an advisory committee of 12 modernist musicians, including Arthur Honeger and Darius Milhaud, who are leaders of the Musical Federation of the People's Front.

ASCAP Trust Trial to Resume If Parley Fails

If the American Soceity of Composers, Authors and Publishers and the United States attorney general's office are unable to agree on stipulations of fact to be entered as evidence in the Government's monopoly action for dissolution of the society, the case will be returned to trial before federal Judge Henry W. Goddard early next winter, attorneys identified with the case said this week. At the same time the position of the society on its threatened withdrawal from Canada was altered when representative music publishing sources in New York pointed out that Canadian exhibitors may benefit if the withdrawal is carried out, to the extent of having to pay no music tax thereafter.

Work on the stipulations of fact for the trial, interrupted in the spring, is scheduled to be resumed August 27th in the offices of Schwartz and Frohlich, attorneys for ASCAP. If an agreement is reached at that time the evidence will be prepared for submission to Judge Goddard during October without a resumption of the trial or taking of further testimony. Records and exhibits in the case are so voluminous that there is little or no likelihood of a decision being handed down this year, it is believed.

Warner Return Not Factor

ASCAP does not regard the recent return of the Warner Brothers music companies to the society's membership as contributing anything vital to the Government's case, inasmuch as that development merely re-establishes the same situation which existed at the time the suit was filed.

The publishers' attitude on the threatened withdrawal from Canada is expected to place a different complexion on the society's plans in that direction. ASCAP officials have held that Canadian exhibitors would find it almost impossible to obtain licenses to perform copyrighted music in pictures and that, as a result, American distributors would be faced with the problem of trying to sell pictures in Canada which exhibitors there could not use without subjecting themselves to expensive copyright litigation.

Music publishers in the United States who own the copyrights of a great part of the music used or likely to be used in pictures, and from whom Canadian exhibitors would be obliged to obtain performing licenses if ASCAP withdraws, dismiss the idea of either setting up their own licensing organizations in Canada or of prosecuting exhibitors for unlicensed performances. They state frankly that to set up their own organizations would be impractical and to prosecute Canadian exhibitors would be against the business interests of the film companies with which they are affiliated.

CHANCE GAME DISPUTE ERUPTS IN NINE CITIES

Boston Limits Use of Beano to Charity; Exhibitor in Virginia Drops Appeal from Fine

After a comparatively quiet period, court and legislative action along the chance game front flared up this week in some nine territories, with some decisions favorable to the operators of the practice, others unfavorable.

In Boston, a city investigation on Beano brought a determination to permit the game to continue only under charity auspices.

Besides Boston, there were developments in Cleveland, Denver, Des Moines, Gastonia, N. C., McKeesport, Pa., New York, Oklahoma City and Richmond, Va. At Virginia's capital, Charles Somma dropped a plan to appeal a fine and this ended the possibility of a test case in that state on the legality of Bank Night. Mr. Somma had been fined $25 for "conducting a lottery" in operating a chance game, and had appealed to the higher courts. He dropped his case, however, when the court granted him permission to do so.

Beano establishments in greater Boston called out their last numbers last Saturday night, for beginning this week Beano is subject to drastic rules put into effect by Mayor Mansfield as a result of the investigation conducted last week by the council committee on licenses. These new regulations will take the game completely out of the hands of professional operators and place them in the hands of charity.

"Taking Toll of Millions"

The committee on licenses conducted a thorough investigation of Beano following complaints of the Boston Better Business Bureau which had charged the game was taking a "toll of millions" from the public. At police headquarters it also was said that four specific complaints had been received against operators of the game and that these complaints had been turned over to the mayor's office. Up to this week, there were approximately 75 Beano games in operation, 50 on one night a week, and 25 six nights weekly. The daily patronage in Boston alone was estimated at 20,000, with a daily revenue exceeding $50,000, while the fee amounted to $2 for a license.

In Cleveland, with the approval of audiences, Bank Night operators are donating a share of each pot to a young mother of three children. The mother suffered amputation of a leg in an automobile accident, and her husband died of the shock.

The Denver Mix

With the addition of a Thursday night cash give-away by the seven Harry Huffman theatres in Denver, the situation there is beginning to look like a local fight. Since the awarding of the Huffman Cinderella $25,000 home in June, Mr. Huffman had offered nothing to offset the Lucky Seven Bank Night. Now he has a Triple Cash Night offering three cash awards of $500, $300, and $100. The idea is to call one ticket each for the two top amounts, and give the $100 away every week. If the winners are not present the amounts will be boosted to $700 and $500.

Lucky Seven has two Bank Nights, one the same night as Mr. Huffman's cash awards and the other as competition to the Huffman Ford give-aways. Recently knocked down for $2,400, the one Bank Night is starting again at $500, while the other is up to $1,600.

All-Expense Trips Given

As an added inducement with his Ford give-away, Mr. Huffman has added two all-expense trips to Glenwood Springs, Col., to each of two winners. How long this vacation special will be continued is not known.

The Huffman group has seven houses, with four first run, the Lucky Seven has one first run house, and the third group to carry on give-aways is the Civic Theatres, including eight houses, with no first runs. The Civic houses have Bank Night.

More than $200,000 in money and merchandise has been given by Denver theatres to their patrons in the past two years, and it looks like that much more will be given away in less time if give-aways keep up as they are going.

In Des Moines, solicitors, with or without megaphones, who stand in front of theatres advertising Bank Nights, are violating the law and will be dealt with accordingly, the city legal department has announced. In studying the city's code of laws, a hawker and barker ordinance was found, according to assistant city solicitors Vernon Hanger and Homer Lyon, and this ordinance prohibits such solicitation as is used in Des Moines for Bank Nights.

The City Council of Gastonia, N. C., has ordered that local establishments operating Bank Night must cease next week. Mayor E. B. Denny said an ordinance will be adopted August 25th outlawing Bank Night, and he warned theatre operators that the law will be rigidly enforced.

In Wilmington, a short distance away in the same state, however, Bank Nights were upheld this week by a New Hanover county grand jury. Making its report for the term, the jury reported, "We find no violation of the statutes in this matter." The inquiry into Bank Nights was prompted by the charge of Judge M. V. Barnhill of Rocky Mount, who told the inquisitorial body that Bank Nights are a "form of gambling that has as vicious an effect as any other kind of gambling."

Appeal Filed at Kansas City

William J. Gilwee, deputy county prosecutor at Kansas City, has filed an appeal in the case of the State vs. R. W. McEwan, Bank Night distributor in western Missouri. Judge Marion D. Waltner of the Jackson County circuit court, who on June 23 held Bank Night not to be a lottery in violation of Missouri laws, has allowed the appeal.

The attorney general will take over the state's case, and the state Supreme court probably will hear the appeal in the September term, though it may be the January one, depending on the condition of the docket. Prosecutor Gilwee filed the original information against McEwan on May 29, this year. McEwan was arrested and released on bond. The information was in connection with the sale of Bank Night to the Ashland here.

Judge Waltner held Bank Night legal because the third essential in a lottery, consideration, is not involved. He termed the promotion simply a unique advertising plan.

Agree to Drop Give-aways

At McKeesport, Pa., Warner Brothers and Joseph Weiss, operators of all the leading theatres there, reached an agreement this week not to use any give-aways or reduced rates at any of the theatres under their control.

Approximately 5,000 theatres throughout the country are now featuring Bank Night, Claude Ezell, general sales manager, stated this week on his arrival in New York from California, where he spent three weeks. Five theatres in the Argentine also are playing the game, he said.

In Manhattan in connection with a talking clock for advertising purposes, Ezell said he would return to Dallas, his headquarters, immediately. He was accompanied by C. U. Yaeger, president of Affiliated Enterprises, national distributors of the game. Mr. Yaeger is here to attend the races at Saratoga and confer with Rick Ricketson, his partner, who is due from Denver in a day or so.

With reports current that Bank night agents will distribute films in the near future, Mr. Ezell explained that in a few territories like Boston the men handling the game are considering taking on pictures, the plan having nothing to do with Bank Night.

Company Seeks Injunction

Claiming it has exclusive rights to Bank Night, Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., has applied in the federal court of Oklahoma City for an injunction against operators of the Jewel, independent house, to prevent its using the plan.

Prospects of a test of the application of the Virginia lottery laws on Bank Night and other chance games or give-aways seem remote, it is agreed in Richmond, as a result of the dropping of a case against Charles A. Somma. Judge John L. Ingram of Hustings court accepted the recommendation of Commonwealth Attorney T. Gray Haddon that the case be dropped. Mr. Somma agreed to pay the costs. The case was up on appeal from the district court where Mr. Somma had been fined $25.

At Salem, Ore., Bank Night and other forms of chance games have been ordered eliminated by the assistant attorney general and it is expected that similar orders will go out to other Oregon cities.

MAGISTRATE SEES SUNDAY LAW DYING

That Sunday "blue laws" will go the way of other unenforced legislation written long ago into legal codes and never repealed is the belief of Magistrate Michael A. Ford of New York City. The magistrate made the prediction after a colloquy with the Rev. Dr. Harry L. Bowlby, general secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance, who appeared in Essex Market Court as complainant against two clothiers and a carpenter accused of working on Sunday.

"So long as we have legalized motion pictures, baseball games and all sorts of recreational games on Sunday, and even legalized liquor," he said, "I don't see why any member of the community should become unduly excited over the sale of a suit of clothes."

Albert Promoted by Warner

Arnold Albert, in charge of press books in the Warner home office, has been appointed exploitation director for the western zone working under Jack Brower, western district manager, S. Charles Einfeld, executive in charge of advertising and publicity, announces. Mr. Albert was to leave Thursday for Los Angeles, where he will make his headquarters.

GRAND NATIONAL READY FOR START SEPTEMBER 1

28 Exchanges to Begin Functioning with "Devil on Horseback" as First Picture

A two-day convention this week at the Hotel Warwick, New York, for the branch managers and sales forces from the east, New England and south, and a similar session for western divisions scheduled for Friday and Saturday, are forging the final links in the setting up of Grand National Films, Inc. With 28 exchanges now ready the company officially will begin functioning in the distribution field on September 1st.

Details of policies, structure, individual producers' plan and contemplated achievements of the company were outlined at the New York convention by Carl M. Leserman, vice-president in charge of distribution. Edward M. Alperson, president, who is now in England, announced from London that the company will definitely establish its own distributing organization there.

At the session in the Warwick on Monday Mr. Leserman emphasized the merits of the unit system as adopted by Grand National and explained that the production policy has been set up along those lines. He expressed the belief that eventually all motion picture companies will turn to this method. Producers already signed to make pictures for Grand National include Douglas MacLean, Bennie F. Zeidman, George Hirliman, Edward Finney, Frank Gay, Boris Petroff, Ray Friedgen, L. Del Riccio, W. B. Frank and Al Rosen.

The distribution system and the financial position of the company also were discussed informally by Mr. Leserman. All branch offices now are complete and ready for action, he announced; all but four of them have been active since May 1st.

"There will be no raiding to obtain men for the various exchanges," he said. "Grand National intends to hire young men and teach them the business."

First Release Set

Production budgets, the number of pictures, stars and producers and selling policies were subjects at the concluding session on Tuesday. The first picture of the 52 scheduled for the year will be "Devil on Horseback," of which a rough print was exhibited to the delegates on Monday. The list will be broken down into three divisions, one to include 36 "Grand National Winners"; the second, eight westerns; and the third, eight outdoor pictures.

Other releases scheduled are "White Legion" with Tala Birell and Ian Keith, produced by Bennie F. Zeidman, September 29; "Yellow Cargo" with Conrad Nagel, produced by George A. Hirliman, October 6; "Captain Calamity" George A. Hirliman color picture, October 13; "In His Steps" with Cecelia Parker and Eric Linden, produced by Bennie Zeidman, October 20; "Call Me Arizona," starring Tex Ritter, October 27; "We're in the Legion Now," George Hirliman color picture, November 4; "Five Little Peppers," Bennie F. Zeidman, November 10; James Cagney in "Great Guy," November 17; "Hats Off," produced by Boris Petroff, November 24; Douglas MacLean's "Twenty-three and a Half Hours' Leave," December 3; "Naval Spy" starring Conrad Nagel, produced by George A. Hirliman, December 7; "Sing, Cowboy, Sing," starring Tex Ritter, produced by Edward Finney, December 10; "Snow Covered Wagons," produced by Lorenzo Del Riccio, December 17; "China" produced by Douglas MacLean, December 24; "Grand Canyon," a George A. Hirliman color picture, January 1; and "Murder with Music" produced by Boris Petroff, January 8.

James Cagney's "Great Guy" will cost $400,000, it was announced, and "Snow Covered Wagon" is budgeted at $750,000.

The sales policy of Grand National was discussed at the Tuesday session by Mr. Leserman and James Winn, eastern division sales manager.

At the luncheon recess on Monday, Sam Fox of Sam Fox Music Publishing Company pledged cooperation for tieups in all localities on music in "Devil on Horseback" and "Captain Calamity," which his company is publishing. He also asked support of the men present in exploiting the films.

Tex Ritter, who will be starred in "The Boots and Saddles" western series to be produced by Edward Finney, appeared during the luncheon and sang three numbers.

British Films for America

In connection with Mr. Alperson's announcement from London of the proposed establishment of a distributing organization there, it was said that British pictures will be produced with assistance from the United States offices both in financing and supervision and with American distribution in view. Mr. Alperson has visited the Pinewood studios of the British and Dominions company and has held conversations with Captain Richard Norton, executive of that company.

Before the convention opened it was announced from Los Angeles that Grand National had taken over the Far West Exchanges in a merger involving exchanges in Los Angeles, Seattle and San Francisco.

Delegates at the convention included C. E. Poppiatt, Atlanta; Harry Segal, Boston; I. Levine, New Haven; Jack Kaplan, Buffalo; Merritt W. Davis, Charlotte; William Shartin, Cleveland; Cleve Adams, Albany; Morris Epstein, New York; John Bachman, Philadelphia; Jules Lapidus, Pittsburgh; Ralph Kinsler, Cincinnati; Harry Brown, Washington; Homer Hisey, New Orleans; Al Hertz, Dallas, and James Davidson, assistant to Mr. Alperson.

The company, formed last April with Mr. Alperson in charge, is an outgrowth of First Division Pictures and is being sponsored by Pathe.

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Paderewski Film

Britain's most important film import this week was Ignace Jan Paderewski, creator and past president of the new Poland, part creator of the League of Nations and, more important, world's greatest living pianist. Paderewski, 76, with all the wealth and fame he needs, is going to make a film for Lothar Mendes. Mendes, planning his first production for Pall Mall Productions, told the maestro he would not have to make up, offered him a script founded on an episode of own life, and let him suggest his own musical program. Paderewski, who has refused to play at a concert to be broadcast, will be on the floor at Denham next week in first scenes of "The Moonlight Sonata."

Shakespeare Film

Delivery of the completed and cut positive of "As You Like It," to the Twentieth Century-Fox offices in London by Inter-Allied productions, was an event of the week. Planned is an early West End premiere of this Bergner version of the Shakespeare comedy, generally regarded as one of the greatest film experiments ever undertaken in England.

Denham Who's Who

Just to let you know that England really is doing a little film producing these days, here is a list of stars currently playing in one studio, the London Films plant at Denham:

Marlene Dietrich
Ed. G. Robinson
Conrad Veidt
Vivien Leigh
Gertrude Lawrence
Marie Tempest
Paderewski
Irene Vanbrugh
Neil Hamilton
Charles Laughton
Elisabeth Bergner
Ann Harding
Leslie Banks
Henry Fonda
Laurence Olivier
Schnozzle Durante
Eugene Pallette
Robert Donat
Miriam Hopkins
Richard Tauber
Raymond Massey
Annabella
Flora Robson
Diana Napier
John McCormack

This list does not include artists with a solely British reputation.

Tidying Up

When the Gaumont-British studio at Lime Grove began its annual two weeks' close-down for overhauling, the situation was this:

Alfred Hitchock's "Sabotage," and the Sonnie Hale "Head Over Heels" (Jessie Matthews), were, so far as interiors are concerned, as good as completed.

"The Nelson Touch," with Arliss directed by Herbert Mason, held up by the star's sickness, was expected to finish any day.

Interiors for "O. H. S." (which is mostly exteriors), were in progress right up to the lay-off.

"The Great Barrier" unit, headed by director Milton Rosmer, was on location in Canada, safely out of the way of painters and decorators.

British weather ("The worst summer we have had for thirteen years," they said to Red Kann) had rather upset the schedule of "Sabotage" on the Northolt exterior lot. It rained for three days, which is more than even realist Hitchcock wanted.

SABU was brought over to London from India by Robert Flaherty to appear in studio sequences at Denham in the role of Little Toomai in "Elephant Boy", which Flaherty is directing for London Films.

England Was Dry

Which brings up another weather story. Harry Perry, shooting exteriors for the Goldwyn Hollywood productions "Dodsworth," and "Come and Get It," lost three weeks in Venice and two in Paris, watching the rain. Perry came to London to shoot the Changing of the Guard at Buckingham Palace and got it first try, in glorious sunshine. (This was after Kann had left London).

Perry left hurriedly for Ireland to get backgrounds for Merle Oberon's "In Love and War," and it has rained in London ever since.

All of which has nothing whatever to do with British studios.

Lawton Cast

Frank Lawton is coming back from Hollywood for the lead in "The Mill on the Floss." Famous in a day for his stage performance in "Young Woodly," which he repeated in a BIP film, with Madeleine Carroll, still remembered as one of the best Thomas Bentley and that company ever turned out, Lawton was in "Cavalcade" and "Little Lord Fauntleroy" on your side.

John Clein Productions is making "The Mill on the Floss," adapted from the George Eliot classic, at Sound City, and Time Whelan is directing. He has a bigger reputation than ever since he made "Two's Company" for Paul Soskin.

A third celebrity associated with the film is John Drinkwater, biographer of Abraham Lincoln and Carl Laemmle, Sr. He is writing the dialogue for Garnett Weston's screen story.

Staged in the lovely West Country, which sets all you Americans raving (and not only you Americans), "The Mill on the Floss" is giving its executives a pleasant location hunt, currently, but it won't be all background. There are fifty-eight speaking parts.

First Color Film

Harold Schuster and the Technicolor crew on the Robert T. Kane "Wings of the Morning" expect to leave for Hollywood, with the last of the negative, in three weeks or so. The color-processing and cutting of the film will be done at Technicolor headquarters.

The John McCormack sequences were about the last of the important studio shots for "Wings of the Morning."

Kane starts preparations right away for his second for New World "Under the Red Robe," Conrad Veidt starring, script by Lajos Biro and historian Philip Lindsay.

Much hangs on technical quality and box-office appeal of "Wings of the Morning," first British all-color feature. Alexander Korda definitely is holding up any color plans of his own until he sees how this picture, made in his own studio, has shaped.

Korda's Army

Wanting an army of 1,000 men for scenes in "Fire Over England," picturing Queen Elizabeth's review of her forces gathered to repel a Spanish invasion, London Films staged an "audition" at a West End theatre, interviewing over 2,000 applicants from British Legion headquarters, agencies and labor exchanges.

This scene will be the first big exterior staged at Denham and about the most ambitious crowd effect put into a British film to date. It will take two days to shoot in the neighborhood of the studio.

ASSOCIATED BRITISH GROSSES $4,630,210

Increased Profit Attributed Partly to Revenue from 58 Newly Acquired Theatres

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

A large increase in the profits of Associated British Pictures Corporation, of which Mr. John Maxwell is chairman and managing director, is shown in the annual report of the company, which announces a final dividend of 7½ per cent, making 12½ per cent for the year.

Gross profits in the 12 months to March 31st were £926,042 ($4,630,210), against £656,725. Net profit, after payment of income tax and interest on loans and debenture stock, was £639,850, against £373,573.

The total of the reserve fund, to which £200,000 is appropriated, is now £1,200,000. The whole of the expenses, £40,000, of the debenture issue of September last have been written off. A balance of £91,998 is carried forward, against £86,481 brought in.

Attributing the satisfactory balance sheet partly to the revenue obtained from newly acquired cinemas, which numbered 58 and bring the circuit total to 283, the directors forecast a gross profit in the current year of £1,000,000.

Capital of ABP is £3,500,000 in ordinary and 6 per cent preference shares and £3,500,000 in debenture stock. It controls British International Pictures, Wardour Films, Pathe Pictures and the ABC circuit.

Soskin-Columbia Deal

Columbia, expected for some time past to announce an extended policy of British production, released this week further details of an agreement with Soskin Productions, Ltd., whereby Soskin will make eight features for Columbia. Three of these will have a minimum cost of £80,000 ($400,000) each and the remaining five will average £40,000. World distribution is aimed at with all eight pictures, according to a statement from Joe Friedman, managing director of Columbia in England.

Also stipulated is cooperation by Columbia in the loaning of directors, stars and technicians.

Paul Soskin, managing director of the producing company, made a big hit recently with "Two's Company," a comedy which, as a United Artists release, had a successful run at the London Pavilion. With his uncle, the Russian banker S. Soskin, he is interested in the new Amalgamated Studios now nearly completed at Elstree. The Soskin productions for Columbia will be the first to be staged there.

$12,500,000 UA Budget

Murray Silverstone declared that British productions on the United Artists program for the next 12 months will cost approximately £2,500,000 ($12,500,000). The budget is worked out on 22 films as follows: London Films, six features, £1,200,000; British & Dominions, two, £80,000; Trafalgar (Max Schach), two, £250,000; British Cine Alliance, one, £80,000; Victor Saville, two, £160,000; Criterion (Fairbanks, Jr.), three £200,000; Erich Pommer, two, £300,000; Garrett-Klement, two, £150,000; Atlantic, one, £100,000; Pall Mall, one, £75,000.

Acts with Film Color Background

Operas played by famous artists, as well as stage, vaudeville and radio acts, on the stage but backgrounded and accompanied by specially produced scenes in Technicolor, make up what is described as a new form of theatre entertainment to be tried by Union Cinemas. The circuit has 150 theatres.

Paramount's theatre interests will cooperate with Union in development of the idea at an asserted yearly cost of $5,000,000. The idea will be pushed under the control of Harold Ramsay.

Paralysis Hitting Theatres in South

Theatres in northern Alabama, Mississippi and Georgia have been seriously affected and in some instances face the possibility of being closed down as a result of the appearance of a number of cases of infantile paralysis, Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association, said on his arrival in New York from the south this week.

Mr. Kuykendall said that while the cases reported have been confined for the most part to northern Alabama, precautionary measures have been taken in the neighboring states. These comprise banning of children under 16 years of age from public assemblages and consideration of extending the ban to prohibit all large public gatherings. Mr. Kuykendall operates theatres at Columbus, Miss., near the Alabama state line.

See Signing of GB-Loew Deal

The general understanding in London this week was that a complete agreement has been reached on the Gaumont-British-Loew's-Twentieth Century-Fox deal between Joseph M. Schenck and the Ostrers.

Only legal formalities remain to be settled and final signatures are expected to be affixed next week. Heavy buying of Gaumont British securities, believed on the part of the factors in the deal, carried the 10-shilling ordinaries to 13 shillings, 10½ pence; the five-shilling "A" ordinaries to six shillings, 7½ pence and the preference shares to 19 shillings.

BOOK REVIEW

A COURSE OF STUDY IN MOTION PICTURE APPRECIATION, by Alice P. Sterner and W. Paul Bowden, published by Educational and Recreational Guides, Inc. ($.50)

In co-operation with the Finer Films Federation of New Jersey the authors, faculty members respectively of the Barringer High School of Newark and the East Orange High School of East Orange, have outlined in orderly manner and considerable detail a 12-unit plan of class work prescribed for instructors with the objective of enhancing motion picture appreciation through cultivation of general and technical knowledge of the medium. The actual text of the 64-page booklet is strictly informative and notably uptodate. Its purpose is defined a little differently by William F. Bauer, chairman of the English department of the East Orange High School, in a foreword.

"It is the conviction of the Finer Films Federation," writes Mr. Bauer, "that the photoplay habits of youth, if formed under sensible direction, are the best assurance that the photoplay of the future will be critically examined rather than blindly accepted. In time, it is hoped, even the evil of double billing, today the crassest stupidity of the motion picture world, may be successfully overcome."—W. R. W.

THE PHOTOPLAY AS LITERARY ART, by Walter Barnes, Ph.D., Educational and Recreational Guides, Inc. ($.50)

Dr. Barnes, Professor of the Teaching of English at New York University, has compressed within forty finely printed pages and under four chapter headings his views, observations and opinions on the past, present and probable future of the motion picture. His work is one of several prescribed as reference reading for classes following the Sterner-Bowden "Course of Study in Motion Picture Appreciation," sponsored by the same publishers.

Dr. Barnes' monograph is ably written, highly contemporary and reflects the author's stoutly taken views on many phases of his subject. His chapter headings are: "The Nature of the Photoplay," "Factors Conditioning the Photoplay as Art," "Esthetic Principles of the Photoplay" and "Toward Better Photoplays." His four conclusions are: "The motion picture is here to stay; it is potentially an admirable medium of literary art; it is not at present as good a medium as it can be made; and all who care for literature should exert their influence to improve the art of the photoplay." Possibly none of these classify as news, but Dr. Barnes' substantiative text should prove interestingly informative to the students for whom it is intended.—W. R. W.

SPANISH FILM INDUSTRY, CAUGHT IN "PRIVATE WAR", NOW SHUT TIGHT.

One American Company's Branch Finds Itself Taking Orders from Anarchist; Consul General's Instructions Ignored

[EDITOR'S NOTE: Correspondent Plummer's observations this week on the continued effect of the Spanish revolution on the motion picture business in that country were placed in transit at Barcelona for New York before the rebels, on Tuesday, started to shell San Sebastian by land, sea and air, causing reprisals by the Red Loyalists in the form of mass executions of prisoners held as hostages, and before cables reported imminent danger to Madrid.]

by HARRY C. PLUMMER
in Barcelona

Coming events as they concern the motion picture in Spain are not casting any shadows. What may be written today concerning the future of the film business here is hopelessly out of date by tomorrow, so rapid is the succession of events and change of the tides of battle.

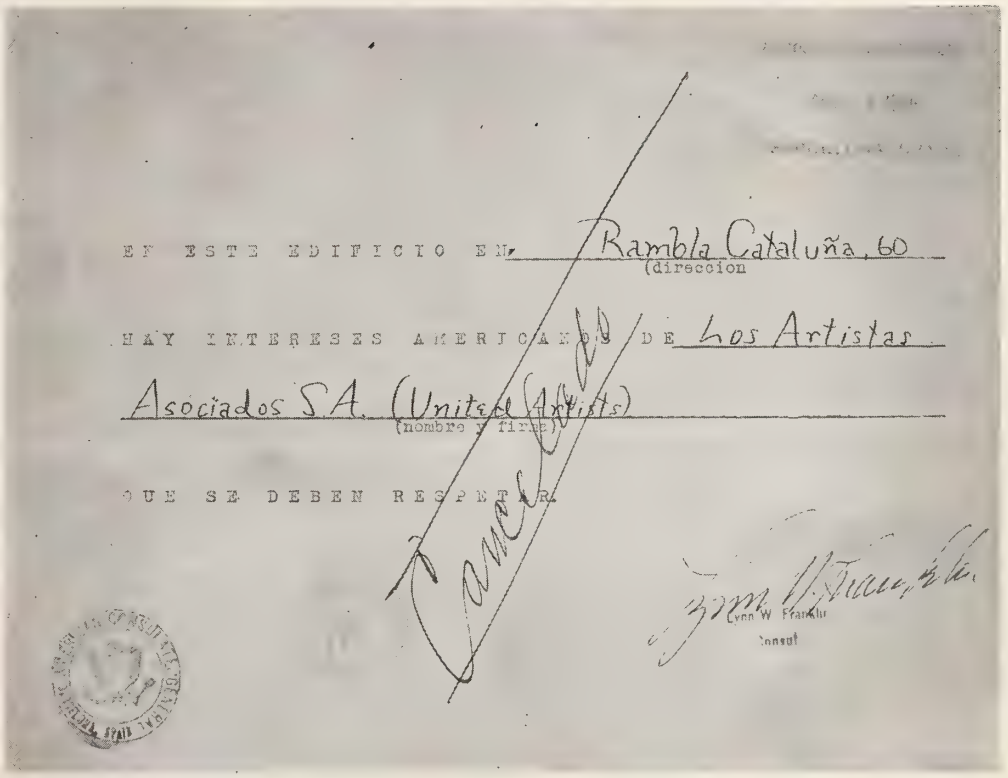
For the first week following the outbreak there was nothing to do but to salute with raised fists, a la Trotzky, Lenin, Stalin, et al. Each of hundreds of motor cars then racing through the streets carried occupants with leveled rifles and revolvers and each car bore the official "initials" of the hour.

The second week's events succeeded each other with startling rapidity, but the third week—last week—was quiet, the quiet that precedes a storm. Summed up, the situation up to the end of last week was as follfollows: the National Labor Federation and the Spanish Anarchists Federation were banded in deadly warfare against the General Union of Workers and Socialist and Marxist groups, including the "P. O. U. M." (Partido Obrero de Unificacion Marxista, meaning the Unified Marxist Labor Party).

To complicate the situation, the motion picture interests now are caught between: (1) the National Labor Federation divisional group; (2) the "S. U. E. P." (Sindicato Unico de Espectaculos Publicos, the Only Official Syndicate of Public Show Business); and (3) a newly-formed group known as the "F. R. E. P." (Federacion Regional de Espectaculos Publicos, the Regional Federation of Public Show Business). This new group is allied with the Socialists' General Union of Workers.

Until this "private war" is settled, the motion picture distributing houses, including the Spanish branches of American companies, will not open again, nor will the theatres reopen until that time.

In a nut shell, the film industry in Spain is not working. Those managing directors who have remained include William B. Morgan, for United Artists; Enrique Aguilar, for Universal, and Rene J. Huet, for Warner Brothers-First National. Each has one or two immediate assistants and secretaries.



Metro has Ferdinand Bruckner, a secretary, on hand, also Luis Echevarria. Metro's Managing Director Edelstein was nigh involuntarily conveyed by a British gunboat from Palma de Mallorca, where he had been marooned, to Marseilles, from where, it seems, he proceeded to Paris.

Fox has Enrique Pages holding forth at the Spanish branch, Managing Director Horen having gone to Marseilles, and then to Paris. Radio has Blanco "pinch-hitting" for Trillo, who is now at Marseilles, en route from Rome to Barcelona.

Paramount has Vidal Batet, in lieu of Mr. Messeri, who likewise fled to Marseilles and to Paris, but last week the conserje (porter) in Paramount's office seemed to be the "Largo-al-factotum" and to be making up the collective minds of the puzzled and distraught Paramount employees.

Columbia is faced with an interesting situation in that the man now in charge of that company's branch, who had assumed charge, one Armando Manez, went over to the Spanish Anarchists forces, and the assistant manager, under Managing Director Gottlieb (likewise in Paris) appears to have no other choice, in view of the prevailing political situation, but to follow Manez' orders. A third member of the Columbia sales family, Harold Walker, a British subject, is one of three permitted by the National Labor Federation and the Spanish Anarchists Federation to work on the premises, according to a sign on the door, which Columbia has placed instead of the display certificate provided.

Certificate Issued by U. S. Consul To Protect Companies in Barcelona

When distributors at Barcelona in war-torn Spain were advised that under the law their subsidiaries there were Spanish corporate entities and therefore that their properties could not be placed under the protection of the United States Government, the certificate reproduced herewith was drawn up for posting on the front of the door of each of the companies and signed by Lynn W. Franklin, consul, to protect the film stocks at least temporarily against looting and burning by the quasi-guerrillas racing through the city streets.

The certificate reads: "In this building, located at Ramba Cataluna, 60, there is American property belonging to United Artists which should be respected." (Signed) Lynn W. Franklin, Consul.

The following answers to Section A have been selected for publication: D. Danielson says: "'Ground' is a term that in modern practice has a rather flexible meaning. Strictly speaking, a ground exists where one or both sides or polarities are connected with the earth, with or without current flow resulting. A concrete example would be an electrical connection due possibly to ruptured insulation between a wire and its conduit. The conduit itself is grounded, therefore the connection from polarity to earth is complete. In a broader sense an electrical connection between a polarity and a part of a machine not intended to be charged, is not a true ground. Nevertheless the polarity is said to be 'grounded' to the frame. This type of ground may be intentional for the purpose of electrical conduction, but in such case both polarities must have connection, usually through some piece of electrical equipment, with the unintentional path."

G. E. Doe replies: "In its true sense a 'ground' indicates connection of one or both sides of a circuit, or rather of polarity, connected with the earth, either through deliberate action or from some unintended cause. The Edison three-wire system employs a true ground for its neutral wire in order to prevent, so far as is possible, charging apparatus connected thereto (conduit, for example) at the voltage of the outer, high-voltage wires. Accidental current carrying connection of a live wire with its conduit would constitute a true ground.

"Another sense in which the term 'ground' is applied is contact of one or both polarities with some piece of the equipment that is not supposed to be charged. A lamp frame, motor generator frame, etc., are examples. This is one type of 'ground' as the term is now used. Still a third is where, for example, current is carried to one side of a piece of electrical apparatus by an insulated wire, whereas the other side of the power source and equipment to be served is 'grounded' to the frame, which is made to serve as an electrical conductor. This now is the almost universal practice in automobiles, the frame acting as one side of one or more circuits."

B. DeVietti says: "Two types of ground are: (1) The permanent ground, employed as a means of limiting voltage charge in case of accidental ground. (2) Accidental ground, caused by insulation fault, or by some other path, permitting electrification of something not pertaining to the circuit. As an example, an accidental connection of polarity, one or both, to the projector lamp frame, lamphouse or some other part of the projector metallic structure."

C. Champney set the matter forth concisely, as follows: "There are two types of ground. One is where either or both positive or negative come into contact with earth, with or without evidence of current leakage. The other is where negative and positive come into contact (High resistance contact, else it would be a short.—F. H. R.) with each other through some unintended path."

W. Limmroth says: "There are two types of ground. In one either or both polarities may be connected to earth, with or without evidence of current flow. In the other, both polarities may have connection through some conductor other than earth, resulting in charging the conductor (a lamp frame, for example) resulting usually in unintended loss of power.

"As examples, one wire of a standard two-wire circuit makes electrical contact with its conduit, which is grounded, resulting in current leakage if it be a three-wire system, since the neutral is grounded. (Maybe so—maybe no, friend Limmroth. Maybe too much resistance between accidental ground and neutral ground.—F. H. R.) However, the neutral wire of the same circuit may be grounded to the conduit, but in that case there will be no current flow.

"There also are many cases where polarities are accidentally connected by mediums other than earth. Carbon dust on lamp insulation may supply a path for slight current leakage and that is called a 'ground.' If the leak was in one insulation the only result would be to charge the lamp frame with

E. M. F. If there be a leak at both positive and negative insulations, then current leakage would occur. In any ground the current loss depends upon the amount of resistance offered by the connection."

J. R. Prater answers: "Two types of ground are: (a) A connection to earth of either or both polarities, whether current flows through the earth between the contacts or not. (b) An unintentional current-carrying connection between polarities through material other than earth.

"Conduit and other exposed parts of electrical apparatus, such as motor-generator frames, projector frames and mechanisms, lamp houses, et cetera, are purposely connected (grounded) to earth as a protection from shocks to those coming into accidental contact with them. Grounding the neutral of an Edison three-wire system reduces the voltage between ground and either ungrounded wire to half the maximum voltage of the system.

"Unintentional grounds may result from innumerable causes. Dust may settle across the insulation between polarities, providing voltage charge to the lamp frame, plus limited current leakage. Conducting material may fall across exposed parts or otherwise come into contact with both polarities of a circuit. A worn spot or break in insulation may supply a path between polarities. Weakened insulation inside conduit may permit leakage of 'juice' to conduit, and thence to ground, where a path is offered to opposite polarity if it be an Edison three-wire, or if there be a 'ground' in opposite polarity in a straight two-wire circuit."

Which, I think you will all agree, is the best answer of the series, which is not meant as a criticism of the others, but as a statement of fact tending to incite men to dig in and send the very best possible answers. Unless I am in error, the diplomas received later by those who successfully complete the course will have real value, therefore they are worth working for. Don't delay answers too long. For example, A. F. Sprafke sent an excellent answer to No. 31, but it came too late for consideration, as did 11 other replies.

(B) J. R. Prater says: "The formation of lead sulphate on both positive and negative plates of a storage battery during the course of discharging insulates the active material of the plates from the sulphuric, which latter is the active element of the battery, thus gradually slowing up the chemical action and in consequence reducing the voltage of the cell. With prolonged discharging sufficient lead sulphate will be deposited to so thoroughly insulate the plates that no appreciable chemical action will take place, whereupon the battery is said to be 'dead.'"

Messrs. Rau and Evans reply: "In course of discharging, a storage battery cell will lose voltage because lead sulphate is formed on the plates, and since that element is in the nature of an insulator, the voltage of the cell will necessarily gradually drop."

I think I will here add excerpts of matter from the fifth edition of Bluebook Volume 3, which was passed upon as correct by the makers of Exide Batteries.

"Further investigation disclosed the fact that after two lead plates were immersed in a bath of sulphuric acid and water of certain strength and these plates were connected, one to positive, the other to negative of an electric generator, after a time these plates themselves became a source of electric power. . . . It was further found that the energy of the plates gradually diminished as power was taken from them until they became 'dead.' . . . That they could be again recharged and their restored power used. That this process could be repeated many times. It was found that in 'charging' the plates a compound known as lead peroxide was formed on the positive plate, whereas the negative plate surface was changed into spongy, or porous lead. . . . It was found that in discharging the peroxide on positive and spongy lead on negative reacted chemically with the sulphuric acid bath (electrolite) so that both plates were covered completely with lead sulphate. . . . This chemical reaction went on until and when it finally stopped, due to all the lead peroxide of the positive plate and pure lead of the negative being converted into lead sulphate, the electric power was exhausted."

You will observe that this differs in fact somewhat from the replies of friends Prater and Rau and Evans, but the effect would be precisely the same either way. In one it is attributed to insulation; in the other exhaustion of the chemical action. After considerable search I have been unable to ascertain definitely just which is correct, but, as said, either way the effect would be identical; at least, so far as I can see.

COLUMBIA'S NEW STARTS OFF
BOB ALLEN
newest hard-riding fast-shooting son of the saddle!

WESTERN STAR WITH A BANG! . . .

THE Hollywood REPORTER

'UNKNOWN RANGER' SWELL START FOR ALLEN SERIES

"THE UNKNOWN RANGER"
(Darmour-Columbia)

This first Bob Allen western produced by Larry Darmour for Columbia release sets a new altitude record for freshness of story and originality of treatment. It is the most entertaining broncho play seen hereabouts for many moons and audiences will heartily agree wherever westerns are box-office currency.

It presents Bob Allen in his first cowboy lead and will at once establish him among the favorites. He has presence, a good voice and an ingratiating smile, and rides, ropes and shoots with the best.

The support is first rate. Martha Tibbett is the rancher's friendly daughter who knows a handsome he-man the minute her eyes light on him and makes a believable and gracious heroine. Six-year-old Buzzy Henry, who can ride and do rope tricks, is her smart comedy stooge. Harry Wood is a heartily hissable villain who never misses a chance for a dirty crack or a dirty trick. Hal Taliaferro as a boastful cowhand lends several good touches of comedy, and Edward Hearne is excellent as the honest rancher who gives Bob his chance.

There is some sprightly cowboy music by Lee Zahler, especially a comic song, "The Flaming Fandango," sung and acted out for several laughs by Wally Wales and the cowboy assembly.

The direction of Spencer G. Bennet gets well off the beaten western track and sustains the interest resourcefully without a breakneck pace. The screenplay of Nate Gatzer does not need it, for it is meaty with colorful lines and plot twists. The photography of James S. Brown Jr., with superb desert locations, is eye-filling.

Producer Larry Darmour will have plenty of work to keep the pace he has set with this one.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY

(Darmour-Columbia)

HOLLYWOOD, Aug. 17.—Every western needs a little something different and this one makes two bids for distinction. Besides a full measure of hard riding, there is a fight between two stallions and some very fair roping and riding by a tiny boy, Buzzy Henry.

The engaging Robert Allen rescues Buzzy from a runaway team and gains the smiles of his sister, Martha Tibbetts, who persuades her ranch-owning papa to put him to work. Harry Woods is the subtle villain who has trained a stallion to lead mares from their home ranges. His nefarious scheme is discovered when a wild stallion joins the herd, but he is not delivered to the sheriff by brave Bob Allen until there has been a very energetic fist fight, a cattle stampede and the man-killing wild stallion has been broken on five minutes' notice. Hal Taliaferro sings a good cowboy ballad, "Frankie's Flaming Fandango," with words and music by Lee Zahler. Nate Gatzert wrote the original and screenplay and Spencer Gordon Bennet directed.

DAILY VARIETY DAILY

The Unknown Ranger

Presenting a new western star in the person of Robert Allen, Producer Larry Darmour reveals in 'The Unknown Ranger' that he has an attraction capable of lining up with the others which are bringing big cash returns to those houses which play the horse operas.

Story, direction, production and action in 'The Unknown Ranger' are all of the standard western variety and the picture should stack up well in those houses which feature such films.

Little 'Buzzy' Henry does a right smart piece of acting for a mite. He rides and ropes like a veteran and is a good feature for any film. Hal Taliaferro's performance as Allen's pal is a very good one and Harry Woods makes an excellent heavy. Martha Tibbetts is a good type for the ridin' sweetheart of a cowboy.

Well-timed introduction of cowboy songs and entertainment lightens up the picture considerably, and the photography by James S. Brown, Jr., and sound by Tom Lambert are up to standard. The picture has been nicely put together by Dwight Caldwell. The direction of Spencer Gordon Bennet keeps the action on a smooth plane throughout.

NEW 20-PAGE BOOK HELPS THOUSANDS OF EXHIBITORS AT

BOX OFFICE!

THEATRES that sell THE MARCH OF TIME know its box-office value. And exhibitors who have put this new 20-page book to work know how it, too, can suggest practical ways of selling even more tickets. Writes Vincent R. McFaul of Buffalo Theatres, Inc., "Every theatre man should have this manual on one of the best short features being offered on theatre screens and one that actually attracts people to the box office." Comments Advertising Manager Sid Dannerberg of Warner Brothers Ohio Theatres, "Your manual is most comprehensive and an intelligent aid to a manager in selling this deserved subject to the public."

Selling THE MARCH OF TIME does not require a major campaign. Time and again, managers have shown how seemingly unimportant "trifles"—little things—can fan an uncommon amount of interest with patrons.

MARCH OF TIME'S new 20-page book is primed with dozens of these inexpensive selling tips, tagged by Variety as "scaled to meet all needs." Your copy is now available at your nearest RKO exchange. Get it today and put it to work!

COURT ACTION EXTENDS 3 B&K CHICAGO LEASES

Marbro, Broadway Strand and Granada Reorganization Is Effected; Issue New Bonds

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH
in Chicago

After many discussions and considerable controversy between various groups of stockholders, the complete reorganization of three large Chicago motion picture theatre properties, with bond issues totaling $2,580,-300, has been announced by Dayton Keith, chairman of the American Bond and Mortgage Company bondholders' committee.

The new leases on the three theatres—the Granada, Marbro and Broadway Strand—have been made with the present lease holders, Balaban and Katz. The reorganization plans, approved by Judge Philip L. Sullivan in the United States District Court, provide for new corporations, stock of which goes to the holders of junior securities and stockholders of the old corporations.

In each of the three, new first mortgage twelve year bonds are being given to holders of present first mortgage bonds, drawing less interest than the original bonds. All of the new bonds are dated July 1, 1935, and interest to June 30, 1936, will be paid at the time of distribution of the new securities.

Under the new plan the theatre rentals are to be applied in payment of taxes, insurance, nominal administration expenses and interest. The remainder is to be used for retirement of the bonds up to a certain point. Then, if the funds available for retirement reach a satisfactory figure, dividends on the stock of the new corporation may be paid, Mr. Keith said.

The new leases, running for the same term as the new bonds, are on a graduated percentage basis with minimum guaranteed rentals. The minimum rent on the 3,937 seat Marbro theatre, 4106 West Madison Street, will be $90,000 annually, compared with a former $80,000 guarantee.

On the Granada theatre, 6427-45 Sheridan Road, with 3,442 seats, the minimum guarantee is $47,500. The 1,527 seat Broadway Strand, 1641 West Roosevelt Road, will have a reduced minimum rent of $27,000 compared with $27,500 formerly.

The Marbro bond issue outstanding is $1,431,-600 at 6½%. The Granada issue of $940,900 at 6½% will have its interest rate reduced to 3%. The Broadway Strand $207,800 issue, at 6½%, has been cut to 5%.

Chicago's first "high priced" motion picture theatre, the Orpheum, will soon become history. Built in 1907, the 640 seat theatre, will be torn down this spring and a chain footwear store erected in its place. The Orpheum was the first Chicago theatre to charge more than ten cents and the first local theatre to run feature length pictures.

The house, for the past five years, has been operated by Warner Bros. Prior to that time it was under the management of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, who opened it in 1907 on a five cent admission policy, showing three short reels of film. In 1912 they raised the price to twice that amount, 10 cents.

When Warners were notified that the rental on the property would be raised they refused to accept the deal and the chain store people took over the lease. The location, which is now away from the center of theatrical activity in the loop, the smallness of the house and the high taxes and rental are factors in the Warner decision.

Myrtle Friedman of the Twentieth Century-Fox exchange is the "CAPA Cruise Queen." Strong support from a legion of friends along film row gave her the chance to win the $50 award and serve as Queen of the midnight cruise which CAPA members and friends indulged in Tuesday evening.

Demands of Chicago city officials that the new 2,000-foot reels have one inch space between the outer edge of the reel and the inner edge of the magazine will force the use of a 14-inch reel, distributors here say, according to Henry Herbel, president of the local Film Board. With the 14½-inch reel standard, a rewinding before the show starts would be required, he pointed out. Mr. Herbel said the home office of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America had advised Chicago distributors to ignore the city ruling.

Like a pair of London busmen on a holiday, Raymond Gallo and Gertrude Merriam, of the home office of Quigley Publications, made welcome visits to the Chicago office within the fortnight.

A $200,000 order for motion picture film printers has been received by the local Bell & Howell plant. This figure is believed to be the largest amount ever expended for such equipment at one time. The sixteen automatic sound and picture printers are for the west coast laboratories of Paramount and Columbia.

George Schaefer of United Artists was in Chicago this week seeking to close a product deal with B.&K. If the negotiations succeed, as is expected on Film Row, United Artists productions will return to the circuit's screens after an absence of several years.

Members of the operator's union are conferring with local theatre executives regarding the new contract for the coming year. A 25% increase in salaries is being asked by the union but so far no grant of such has been made by the theatre men. On the contrary, the theatremen assert they will seek a wage reduction, claiming that present wages are too high and that, with the adoption of the 2,000 foot reel, the operators will have less to do.

Tommy Kearns, press representative for Fanchon and Marco, with his bride, Valary Vance, stopped off in Chicago for a few hours to visit with some of the boys at B & K before proceeding to South Dakota, where the couple will spend their honeymoon.

Business in Chicago's loop theatres has been on the upgrade the past few weeks. One reason is the influx of better film attractions than in many weeks past and, secondly, the rise is a normal one, figures for past years showing that August is one of the best months for business in the loop.

FROM READERS

FUNERAL SEQUENCES CALLED BIG MISTAKE

To the Editor of the Herald:

There are so many socalled "Big" things bothering all of us in the business, the New Season, the utter collapse of the Trade Practice efforts, Dual Bills, Bank Night, etc., that it seems rather useless to revert to the kind of criticism of picture methods and practices that used to be almost weekly in the pages of the old Herald and World.

We've had one thing on our mind a long, long time. Why is there such an increasing tendency in Hollywood to include the very details of death and its subsequent funeral? We all know these things happen, but very few really enjoy them. No one who has a personal contact with either ever forgets entirely, or, at least, they never care to have the memory brought back time and time again through the medium of their entertainment.

The newsreels used to have a ban on such things. Now, hardly a week goes by without some accident or fatality and its accompanying burial scene being shown, described and imprinted on some mind that came to the theatre to be amused.

A very definite case in point is that marvelous Technicolor achievement of Walter Wanger's "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine." The funeral consumed lengthy footage, the mourning "breakdown" by Fuzzy Knight was unquestionably well done, but does it belong in the theatre? I, personally, have never had direct contact with the situation I write of, but I stand in my theatre show after show; I know my patrons personally; this is a very small town, and I see what happens to this good friend or that as these needless scenes are over-emphasized. Death is an obvious part of drama, we all know about it, realize it, can see it play its part in the picture we are seeing and the story we are absorbing, but I do know very well that the present Hollywood idea on the subject does not add to their finished product.

The silent picture owed its strength to what it left to the viewer's imagination; one of the weaknesses of sound is that but little can be so left and surely the subject of this letter might well be one of the few.

"Pine" did not do well here. I know the reason. But more than that, I like to send my patrons home as happily as possible, and it might surprise a number of picture producers how little their realistic efforts are appreciated in the small towns of this country. Entertainment is what the people want, and the proportion of pictures that provide it is not so great that this element, that is the backbone of our business, can be trifled with.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas.

Self-Regulation Cited as Aid to Film and Ads

Self-regulation within the motion picture industry has brought (1) improved quality of production accompanied by increased public demand for finer pictures; and, (2) an improved quality of motion picture advertising. Thus does the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Will H. Hays, president, observe the results to date under the Production Code Administration, as governed in Hollywood by Joseph I. Breen, and the Advertising Advisory Council, conducted in New York by J. J. McCarthy.

The occasion for these conclusions is the issuance to the press of a dual report on the work and progress to date of both forms of self-regulation.

"There have been fewer and fewer rejections each year" in advertising copy, as voluntarily submitted to Mr. McCarthy's Advisory Council, the Hays report says, thus "indicating the improved quality of advertising." The extent to which these improvements have been made is explained in the following statistics:

Pieces of Copy Submitted in 1935-36	Number Discarded, Retouched, Rejected or Revised
103,310 Stills	1,027
12,450 Advertisements..	351
12,100 Exploitation Ideas	17
2,044 Posters	62
867 Trailers	3

Approximately 85 per cent of motion picture advertising originates with MPPDA member companies, it was said. The remaining 15 per cent has, in large measure, followed the lead of the Association.

The advertising code was adopted on June 6, 1930, and was made applicable to all forms of motion picture advertising and exploitation. The machinery as it is presently constituted was set up by the executive committee of the MPPDA on November 17, 1933, headed by Mr. McCarthy and including in the council the advertising heads of member companies. To secure a uniform interpretation of the code, it was agreed that all advertising material be voluntarily submitted in advance for inspection and a stamp of approval.

The report on the Production Code Administration reminds that, "Throughout the years Mr. Hays has maintained the open door and" and that "educational, social, religious and other groups and film councils are functioning in several thousand communities to support better pictures." In all cases the MPPDA "cooperates directly."

The production code, it is said, keeps "unimpaired the integrity and vigor of the screen," in concluding an outline of the incidents which led up to its adoption, in 1934.

HONG KONG SHOWMAN REPORTS ON PICTURES

From Hong Kong, China, came last week a new contributor who has found the reports in the "What the Picture Did for Me" department "a source of invaluable information."

That Manager Goldin has been a consistent reader of "What the Picture Did for Me" is evidenced in reports, first of which appeared in last week's issue. Mr. Goldin writes:

Herewith some of my contributions for your page, which always was and will be a source of invaluable information for me.

I hope that your readers will be interested to know what the pictures are doing for me in Hong Kong, China.

The Star Theatre is a second run neighborhood house, 570 seats, and is patronized exclusively by Europeans. There is only 3 per cent of Chinese amongst our patrons.

If you will be interested I will be glad to contribute regularly.

Week Run Limit in Brazil Cuts Gross

by A. WEISSMANN
in Rio de Janeiro

The unvarying policy in the exhibition of pictures in Rio de Janeiro which makes it virtually impossible to hold a film at one theatre more than one week, is seen as seriously affecting potential grosses. The Paramount picture, "Desire," was doing exceptionally fine business in its first week at the Palacio, yet was withdrawn to make way for "Mazurka," German film released by Cine Allianz. The same was true of the pictures of the Louis-Schmeling fight, which were very well received but were taken off after one week.

Carmen Santos, president of Brazil Vita Films, which produced "Cidade Mulher," has decided to release the film directly throughout the country, following a difference with the Associacao Cinematographica de Productores Brasileiros and the Distribuidora de Films Brasileiros. By the move the company is saved 18 per cent of the 20 per cent which would have gone to the distributing organization if it had taken over distribution of the film.

Erpi Demonstrates Amplifying System In Hollywood Bowl

A Stereophonic Sound Reinforcing System, developed by Electrical Research Products Corporation designed to amplify without distortion the music of a personally-present orchestra was demonstrated this week at the Hollywood Bowl with an orchestra of 100 musicians under the direction of Leopold Stokowski. (Picture in Pictorial Section.)

The system, first principles of which were demonstrated in 1933 when a concert given by Dr. Stokowski and his Philadelphia orchestra was transmitted over telephone lines and reproduced in Constitution Hall, Washington, D. C., is designed to reproduce the "auditory perspective" or stereophonic effect by which the listener can identify the location of each instrument or choir. Depression years delayed further development of the principle until now.

To enhance the sense of reality by spreading the music from the loudspeakers throughout the audience as the orchestra itself would do if it were sufficiently powerful and to create a greatly magnified atmosphere of sound not perceptibly different from that of the unaided indoor orchestra the system employs two new principles.

The stereophonic effect is achieved by the use of three distinct amplifying circuits. Three standard Western Electric microphones of the electro-dynamic type are aligned in front of the orchestra. The two end microphones, corresponding to the left and right human ears, respond primarily to the orchestra and the central one lends depth or power to the soloist's voice or instrument. Three loudspeakers disseminate the sound picked up by the microphones in corresponding directions.

New Speaker Employed

To cover the wide range of sound waves produced by an orchestra tones extending from 35 vibrations per second to as high as 12,000 must be transmitted with equal volume. Because the single element type electrical loudspeaker is incapable of this, a new Di-phonic speaker is employed. The speaker combines two basic elements, a multi-cellular or high frequency unit which projects the high pitched vibrations and the bi-cellular or low frequency unit which radiates the powerful bass.

Special controls or filter networks were installed in the Bowl for the concert by means of which the bass or low pitched music was subjected to the conductor's will. Dr. Stokowski controlled quick volume changes by means of an accelerator pedal on the podium and in addition a master control was stationed in the audience. A total of 8 people were necessary to operate the system.

The Technicians Branch Executive Committee of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences sponsored a demonstration and explanation of the system immediately following the concert in the Bowl. Dr. Harvey Fletcher of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, who developed the apparatus, conducted the demonstration.

MILLION

A True Reproduction of the Original

Now – Sound Has a New Box-Office Value!

For the first time, a sound system is offered that can reproduce the complete range of balanced, dramatic sound – from stark silence to soul-stirring crescendo – sound that pulsates with real life – sound that brings hitherto unheard beauty to every seat – Every Sound Effect That Can Be Put On The Sound Track, as true as a mirrored reflection in a true mirror – MIRROPHONIC.

Big grosses belong to the new, dramatic sound effects. Box-office receipts of test theatres on a few pictures during the past year have proven it – future pictures will have many more dramatic sound effects, now that Western Electric's new, epoch-making MIRROPHONIC sound system has contributed such money-making possibilities to picture production. It is even possible that the increased receipts from a few such pictures will pay for the cost of the change to MIRROPHONIC.

Climaxing fifty years of Bell Telephone Laboratory research and ten years of Electrical Research Products' experience, embodying in commercial form the revolutionary principles of the historic Stereophonic☆ reproduction demonstrated to science in 1933, MIRROPHONIC is a perfected new sound system retaining every basic Western Electric superiority of the past and setting a new standard of leadership for years to come.

E.R.P.I.'s world-wide service facilities assure the proper installation of MIRROPHONIC, and the ever-watchful inspections assure the maximum in performance of this new sound system that will give true reproduction of the original.

MIRROPHONIC brings with it to exhibitors a powerful exploitation campaign which will make every listener conscious of the superiority of the sound in your theatre. Our representative will assist in your campaign.

MIRROPHONIC may be installed in theatres already having Western Electric Sound Systems on a step-by-step modification plan adapted to your individual needs. An illustrated descriptive book is ready for you.

☆Stereophonic Sound, or Auditory Perspective, was first successfully demonstrated by Bell Telephone Laboratories before the National Academy of Sciences on April 27, 1933, seven years after Western Electric first brought the miracle of sound to motion pictures.

Writing Teams Heavy Story Contributors

Screen writing teams commonly employed as a unit create an important number of feature productions, according to a survey completed by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in connection with the administration of the Writer-Producer Code of Practice.

The revised Writers' Code, now effective in the major studios, requires that a writer must have contributed more than 25 per cent of the value of a screen play to receive screen credit. This limits the division of screen play credit to not more than three writers on a production. An exception is made in the case of established writing teams, however, who are recognized and employed as such and who are considered as one writer in determining credits under the code.

Of 16 teams registered by the Academy for joint credits in the 10-month period, nine are teams of two men and seven of a man and a woman.

The producing company had a bit of labor trouble during the filming of the first picture but straightened it out by hiring union men from Canada, but they did nothing during the actual filming of scenes except sit by and watch the proceedings.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

CATTLE THIEF, THE: Ken Maynard, Geneva Mitchell—No better or worse than 90 per cent of western product. Just a weekend western. Running time, six reels. Played July 31-August 1.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

ESCAPE FROM DEVIL'S ISLAND: Victor Jory, Florence Rice, Norman Foster—Played on double bill with "Morals of Marcus," which made a pretty fair program. Title seemed to draw a little extra for us. Running time, 63 minutes. Played August 5-6.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

GRAND EXIT: Edmund Lowe, Ann Sothern—Just the type for us. Comedy and action combined pleased every one. Played July 20-30.—C E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

SUNDOWN RIDER: Buck Jones, Barbara Weeks—Another good reissue. Entire series has been good. Running time, 63 minutes. Played July 26-28.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

First National

BULLETS OR BALLOTS: Edward G. Robinson, Joan Blondell—A gangster picture dealing with the rackets. Okay, but not outstanding. Too many of these pictures are coming through at this time, kidnaping and racketeering and gangster; the old cycle working again.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

EARTHWORM TRACTORS: Joe E. Brown, June Travis—Personally, I like Brown. But I find so many patrons who do not. I liked this picture, too. But the audience reaction was divided. From the reviews, I supposed it would have the audience in the aisles with laughter, but here they just sat and watched, and managed to giggle once in a while. The only time I found them in the aisles was when they were leaving the theatre. Running time, 69 minutes. Played August 2-5.—Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

GOLDEN ARROW, THE: Bette Davis, George Brent—Nice comedy from Bette Davis and George Brent. Fair business. Played August 7-8.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HEARTS DIVIDED: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—Rate this one as a miss-out for Vitagraph. Even the smartest of them fall by the wayside when they go high hat and drag in the Napoleon era. Although set in American settings, most of it, Powell looked the perfect sap in the Napoleonic uniform. Miscast and dud at the box office.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

STORY OF LOUIS PASTEUR, THE: Paul Muni, Josephine Hutchinson—Played it to our weekend patrons. Too good for them, although it was a masterpiece. Every exhibitor owes it to his patrons to show it.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Gaumont-British

MORALS OF MARCUS: Lupe Velez, Ian Hunter—Nice little comedy production that fitted well on double bill. Running time, eight reels. Played August 5-6.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

THIRTY-NINE STEPS, THE: Robert Donat, Madeleine Carroll—Good picture, but can't understand why it was rated so high. Played July 29-30.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

EXCLUSIVE STORY: Franchot Tone, Madge Evans—A very good program picture which played to satisfied patrons.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

FURY: Spencer Tracy, Sylvia Sidney, Walter Abel—A very expertly directed picture that is strong meat. Tracy is very good in this one, and also this actor Walter Abel does a swell job of his role as prosecutor. Not average business on it, although we sold it high as the picture deserves. But something was wrong and I don't know what. It was not supported, whether they pulled away from it on account of the title or the fact that there have been so many of not exactly this type, but of gangster complex that the title indicated, although our copy refuted this. It did not hit at the box office.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MOONLIGHT MURDER: Chester Morris, Madge Evans—Not up to the MGM standard by a long shot. Maybe we get to looking for too much from this company. Anyway, this really was a dud. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 24-25.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

PETTICOAT FEVER: Robert Montgomery, Myrna Loy—A story which taxes the credulity of the patrons, but which will get by and please most people. We did well with it, but it happened to hit a two-day holiday during which any picture would have grossed well. Running time, 80 minutes. Played July 24-25.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

ROBIN HOOD OF EL DORADO, THE: Warner Baxter, Ann Loring—An old-time border story. It will go where you can use a western, and should be a knockout in Mexico. Running time, 85 minutes. Played July 31-August 1.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

SAN FRANCISCO: Clark Gable, Jennette MacDonald, Spencer Tracy, Jack Holt—Seldom do we play a return engagement of a picture, and even less seldom do we play a return engagement so soon after the first-run. In this case, "San Francisco" deserved it. On the second engagement, business was right on par, or a little better, than on the original run. The picture is a natural for business, and how it pleased! The earthquake scenes, of course, have never been equaled. Running time, 115 minutes. Played June 28-30 and July 24-25.—Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

UNGUARDED HOUR, THE: Loretta Young, Franchot Tone—Certainly a swell picture. A little heavier than we anticipated and we played one of the "Crime Doesn't Pay" subjects, which we should not have done. Nevertheless, this is a fine picture, excellent story and grand cast. Running time, 88 minutes. Played August 7-8.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BIG BROWN EYES: Joan Bennett, Cary Grant—Gangsters and manicurists and reporters. Okay enough, but little that is new. Played July 29-30.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GLASS KEY, THE: George Raft, Claire Dodd—A real fine picture that I nearly missed playing. Don't pass this one up. It's a real action mystery picture.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

LITTLE AMERICA: Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd—Excellent story of Admiral Byrd's last trip to the South Pole. It drew exceptionally well, even though a little old. Running time, 52 minutes. Played July 29-30.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

POPPY: W. C. Fields, Rochelle Hudson—A very fine picture with an appealing love story plus Fields' inimitable comedy. Did nicely at box office. Played July 24-25.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SKY PARADE: Jimmy Allen, Katherine DeMille—Fair picture that will suit the not too discriminating fans. Allen seemed ill at ease before the cameras. Played August 7-8.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

VIRGINIA JUDGE, THE: Walter C. Kelly, Marsha Hunt, Stepin Fetchit—Very, very ordinary program picture with no drawing power whatsoever. Running time, 60 minutes. Played July 29-30.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Republic

LEAVENWORTH CASE, THE: Norman Foster, Jean Rouverel—Just another detective yarn. Played August 7.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

SAGEBRUSH TROUBADOUR: Gene Autry, Barbara Pepper—Either the novelty has worn off or this was under par. At any rate, it did not go as well for us as previous Autry pictures. Running time, six reels. Played August 7-8.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

RKO Radio

DANCING PIRATE. Charles Collins, Steffi Duna—It is the writer's opinion that when producers try to make an outstanding picture, they should give more attention to the cast. Here was a fairly good story that absolutely flopped at the box office. Played to the lowest two-day gross in history. Story and color good. Played August 5-6.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

FARMER IN THE DELL, THE: Fred Stone, Jean Parker—Good programmer. Played July 22-23.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—This is no special. Ginger needs Astaire. Did below average business. RKO missed on this one, although I liked it myself.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE: Gene Raymond, Margaret Callahan—Just fair. Kept our patrons guessing. No extra business. Did below average.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

TWO IN REVOLT: Louise Latimer, John Arledge—An above average animal story with extraordinary acting honors going to the clever dog "Lightning" and horse "Warrior." Play it when the kids can see and enjoy it. Played August 4.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WITNESS CHAIR, THE: Ann Harding, Walter Abel—Okay courtroom melodrama. Played August 5-6.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

YELLOW DUST: Richard Dix, Leila Hyams—Excellent western with plenty of romance. Leila Hyams is still okay. Why not more roles? Played July 24-25.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee—Shirley is still the grand little trouper with no rivals in her particular line, although we do believe there are a couple others who will be pushing her hard before long. They will have to go some, though, to beat Shirley's natural dancing ability, her singing, her exquisite little form and that grand smile. Running time, 77 minutes. Played August 2-4.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED: George O'Brien, Irene Ware—Above average western with a good story and very pretty scenery. Running time, 59 minutes. Played July 31-August 1.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED: George O'Brien, Irene Ware—Drew above average weekend business. Our farm trade liked it. Seemed to satisfy.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SINS OF MAN: Jean Hersholt, Don Ameche—I take my hat off to the exhibitor that can sell this picture to the public and get any business. On a religious theme, not any too well directed, and altogether a washout as far as business is concerned, and most of the audience expressed dissatisfaction with the picture; in other words, they did not like it. Another error for Fox. Hersholt was done wrong in this one and the trailer traded on his work in "The Country Doctor," also, the press sheet. It is a far cry from that picture. Fox ought to feel their face burn in even mentioning it to compare with the "Doctor." Where they get these cock-eyed titles is beyond me. That handicapped it from the start.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

TO MARY—WITH LOVE: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—A disappointment. After an impressive beginning, the picture falls completely flat, the audience loses interest and fidgets around in the seats. Added to its slow pace, the picture's other notable drawback is the unconvincing acting of Myrna Loy and Warner Baxter. At all times, they give the impression that they are doing just what the director told them to do, and wondering whether or not it is correct. The back-kissing scene, with Myrna's dying calf expression, brought roars of laughter from the audience. Properly enacted, it would not have caused this mirth. Ian Hunter is the only redeeming part of the whole picture, because he handles his role with sympathy and understanding, and he is natural. The picture should have ended with Myrna marrying him, but as she says, "I think everyday life should be more like the movies." Don't promise your patrons too much.—Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

YOUR UNCLE DUDLEY: Edward Everett Horton—Played it on a double bill. Nice clean comedy with the ever popular Horton doing his stuff. Worth playing. Did us business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS: Jack Buchanan, Lili Damita—They booed this and walked out. I hid in the office and went home early. Shelve it and be thankful for an honest tip. It smells.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

GHOST GOES WEST, THE: Robert Donat, Jean Parker—If you are in need of a photoplay with the screwiest possible plot, don't overlook this one. I'll put it against the field. The motif seems to be for the British to show the world that American business men are a bunch of half-baked saps. Running time, 85 minutes. Played July 28-29.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY: Freddie Bartholomew, Dolores Costello Barrymore—Excellent production that did badly at our box office. Just not the type for our spot. Played July 26-27.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

ONE RAINY AFTERNOON: Francis Lederer, Ida Lupino—A rather "hokumesque" comedy. Light and harmless. It will probably satisfy 80 per cent of the average movie audience. Running time, nine reels. Played August 4-5.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

Universal

COWBOY AND THE KID, THE: Buck Jones, Dorothy Revier—If Robert Taylor took to boots and saddles, his popularity would drop like the temperature last winter. He's wise. On the other hand, Buck Jones can ride and shoot and save the ranch, but when it comes to acting emotionally, he's a dud. As a result, this picture stacks up as poor entertainment. Stick to your "shoot 'em up," Buck, but leave the acting to those who are qualified for it. Running time, 58 minutes. Played July 31-August 1.—Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

HIS NIGHT OUT: Edward Everett Horton, Irene Hervey—A laughable comedy. Average business. Played July 21.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SHOW BOAT: Irene Dunne, Allen Jones—Superb photoplay. A-1 entertainment and nice business. Played August 2-3.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SUTTER'S GOLD: Edward Arnold, Binnie Barnes, Lee Tracy—Wouldbe epic manages to entertain satisfactorily. Fine performances by Arnold and Tracy. Small draw. Played July 31-August 1.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

HOT MONEY: Ross Alexander, Beverly Roberts—When I saw Ross Alexander in "Shipmates Forever," I predicted to myself a brilliant future for him. The chap is good, but his fast talking is getting on the public's nerves. The picture is fair entertainment; no box-office draw, however. But Ross is talking himself speedily out of the public's favor. Beverly is a honey. Running time, 67 minutes. Played July 22-23.—Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Inc. General patronage.

TIMES SQUARE PLAYBOY: Warren William, June Travis—Very, very light and frothy. Filled with dialogue and not too much action. Seemed to please our patrons, however. Running time, 62 minutes. Played August 5-6.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

TIMES SQUARE PLAYBOY: Warren William, June Travis—Some liked this; others didn't. No extra business. Played July 28.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

"ARE YOU READY FOR FALL?"

This is about the time when businessmen sit down to plan sale and advertising policies for the forthcoming months. What to do in the pursuit of prosperity, how much to spend and when are all discussed, arranged. A general course is set and the machinery put into motion toward a determined goal. Smart merchandisers usually know where they're headed, and its a practice that all managers might well adopt for their own benefit.

There are, of course, the annual conventions of representative circuits where the managerial personnel is gathered, and all operation problems given a thorough going over. But although these gatherings are a part only of extended operations, there is no reason why a manager attached to a single situation or to the smallest of circuits cannot go into convention with himself and endeavor to chart a course similarly for the new season. After all, many of the final decisions made in a circuit meeting result from reactions of individual managers in attendance.

Thus the italic line "Are you ready for Fall" spotted frequently in the following pages is intended to act as a quick reminder for those who take the seasons as they come and make no special preparation for the digging up of additional business.

There are few exhibitors indeed who will look without favor upon a soundly conceived plan that affords an opportunity for more profitable boxoffice in the coming months.

THE PRESS BOOK AGAIN

Having the opportunity to look over press books from the various home offices your Chairman finds less occasion these days to become choleric over the failings of this industry stepchild. The state of mind may arise from a great weariness over the subject in general or then again it might be due to the manifest improvement in the quality and utility of the material offered.

Examination of recent press books deposited on our desk finds much of value. Paramount's "American Wife" and "Texas Ranger"; United Artist's "Last of the Mohicans"; Warner's "China Clipper" and "Anthony Adverse," Universal's "My Man Godfrey" and 20th Century-Fox's "Road to Glory," for instance, may be given a well-earned nod of approbation.

Putting out one or more press books a week to keep up with individual release schedules is far from being the world's duckiest job. The home office admen report themselves as wide open for any ideas from the field to improve this service.

FOR 52 WEEKS A YEAR

On the subject of conventions, the dates of August 26 to 28 are given added importance in spotlighting the first 1936 gathering, in Toronto, of the Famous Players-Canadian theatremen from the eastern sector of the Dominion. As at other such meetings, the schedule calls for talks, discussions, previews, picnics. But, in addition, the schedule also sets forth a very pleasant ceremony not included in every "other such meeting"—the presentation by N. L. Nathanson, President, of percentage checks to all managers present.

Not bonus money, gentlemen, and not prizes offered for short term drives. The checks are the fruits of the plan inaugurated by the far-seeing Nathanson and General Manager J. J. Fitzgibbons, whereby every manager in the circuit is able to earn a fat commission above salary for extra grosses his efforts bring in during every one of the 52 weeks in the year.

AH, THERE, FIDO

Lots of excitement up in the Rochester sector where was held the recent trial of Idaho, hound dog, accused of causing the death of a fourteen-year-old boy. Story of national interest hit the wires and to cash in on the general madness, Les Pollock at Loew's ran the Pete Smith short "Killer Dog," put a bannered purp on the street led by an armed guard, had the short privately previewed for the presiding judge with much publicity forthcoming.

Pollock's success opens up a lot of exploitation possibilities for showmen in New York where a new ordinance makes liable to arrest any dog caught soiling the sides of buildings.

In a recent issue of Postage and The Mailbag, direct mail trade paper, was noted an advertisement on effective "selling" letters, the copy among other things calling attention to our boyhood days when the butcher always threw in a slice of balogna to show his appreciation.

We are strongly tempted to offer that the custom popularized by the butcher is being kept alive today by many advertisers.

Style Slants Stressed For Mexico City Date

What the women are wearing today and costumes imagined in "Things to Come" were utilized effectively by Manager Mauricio de la Serna in his campaign on the date at the Cine Alemeda, Mexico City. Top tieup was made with fashionable women's shop by having shapely masked senorita in costume of 2036 posing in window (see photo) amid models draped in today's new styles.

Stunt was called a traffic-stopper and was followed by a street bally of boy and girl, masked and in costumes of the picture with the usual back theatre placards. Couple paraded through the city stopping at the busier sections.

Promotes Sock Display For "Pastures" Opening

Fine stand-in of the Ohio Warnerites with the local press is much in evidence with a three-column by thirteen deep display promoted through the circulation department in the Akron Times-Press for the date at "Green Pastures" at the Strand, in that spot.

There was nothing at all in the ad to indicate a tiein, reports Dick Wright, all copy referring to the picture, with the strongest plug given for the date. That Akron was selected for one of the early showings was made much of, ad leading off with stock reverse circle reading "What Happens Thursday Night?" referring to the first showing.

"Are you ready for Fall?"

New In New Haven

Reported a first-time in New Haven, was an open trolley car, bannered, used by Manager H. H. Maloney, at the Poli, to bring in an orphanage girls' band from the suburbs to the theatre to see "Poor Little Rich Girl." The band played on the way downtown and also in the lobby.

Weinberg Changes Posts

Herman G. Weinberg moves over from his post of publicity chief, French Pictures to operate for Jean Lenauer, the 58th Street Theatre, New York, where new policy is to be foreign films.

Plug San Antonio With Trailer at Texas Exposition

Constructed by the Interstate Theatres and dubbed the Alamo City's Good Will Pathfinder, an elaborate trailer to represent San Antonio at the Dallas and Fort Worth expositions was recently brought to the state Centennial celebration. Bannered with panoramas of typical local scenes, the trailer was escorted by state highway motor patrolmen and acting as hostesses were attractive girls in native Mexican costume.

Theatremen in the party included Raymond Willie, Interstate San Antonio city manager, who is credited with the idea, Manager William O'Donnell, Aztec Theatre, Jack Chalman, Interstate advertising manager, Damon Harvey, electrician and Jack Marquis, sound technician.

Outfit is said to cost in the neighborhood of ten thousand dollars, finished in white with ornate chormium trimmings. Job is also reported to be one of the most pretentious mobile neon lighting arrangements yet conceived. High powered sound system and p.a. system is carried as is well known announcer to handle microphones.

In assuming sponsorship of the visit to Dallas, Karl Hoblitzelle, Interstate president and Bob O'Donnell, general manager, have expressed the belief that the campaign will stir up a lot of interest in San Antonio.

Patrons "Wet" Hands In Reeth's Waterfall

Illustrated in accompanying photo is the attractive "cool" setpiece created by Manager Fred Reeths, Jr., with the aid of his house artist at the Sheboygan Theatre, Sheboygan, Wis., which Fred says fooled a lot of the folks.

Feature of the flash is a waterfall made of tubular glass suspended on a slow-moving motor to give the effect of running water. Concealed green light illuminates the glass and behind the "running water" a sign reading: "It's Comfortably Cool Inside." Ice effect is obtained with papier mache.

Tip-off on effectiveness of the piece, according to Reeths, is that the folks step up and place their hands under the waterfall, evidently to feel the wetness of the water.

Owens' Family Guests of Lykes To See News Reel

Few weeks back, Manager Jack Lykes, Loew's Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, obtained his first shots of Paramount's news reel on the Olympic Games with special emphasis given the prominent part played by Jesse Owens. The reel showing Owens winning the three events was received in the morning after being transported to the United States by the Von Hindenburg and flown by special plane to Cleveland.

Reason for all the haste was that the athlete is a Cleveland boy, his family also resident locally and Lykes immediately arranged for Owens' wife and parents to attend the evening performance of the same day as guests of the management. Special car was used to transport the guests from their home and what made the event more interesting was that it was the first time that Owens' father had attended a motion picture. Posters showing the sprinter in action and announcement of the news reel shots were of course immediately planted out front and for publicity purposes, Jack posed the guests studying the display.

Lykes had a reporter on hand from the Cleveland Plain Dealer to cover the story and reports he obtained a fairly decent break what with the papers going to town on the local Great Lakes Exposition.

Strand Goes Circus On "Bengal Tiger"

Plenty of big-top stuff in Dinty Moore's advance on "Bengal Tiger" at the New York Strand with front painted in tent stripes and decorated with action stills. Crowd-stopper was animation in the arch showing two mechanical tigers (see photo) facing animated cutout of Barton MacLane wielding a whip and chair. P. A. system was hooked up with record of jungle roars to synchronize with action of the animals. On both sides of marquee, facing uptown and downtown, were placed 12-foot tiger enlargements with eyes in transparent green and mouth in red.

Street stuff included boys in circus uniforms distributing imprinted bags of peanuts and a first time, reports publicist Irv Windisch, was a hookin with Kresge's five-and-ten which allowed theatre to imprint store bags.

"RHYTHM" STAGE SET. To sell those good ole outdoors as background for his date on "Rhythm on the Range", Manager Frank Heller, Fox, Bakersfield, Cal., arranged this realistic stage setting in conjunction with appearance of Miss Bertha Hall, state's champion Outdoor Girl, and the Kern County Rangers in uniform. Papers and Chamber of Commerce cooperated.

Personal Column Used By Rotsky for "Number"

Contacting local tobacco company, George Rotsky, Palace, Montreal, Canada, promoted photos of Robert Taylor in "Private Number," reverse side carrying tobacconist's ad. Girl costumed appropriately distributed these on street.

Daily ad was placed in personal column of Montreal Herald giving telephone number of pay station on mezzanine floor with instructions to ask for Ellen. Checkroom girl had to be stationed there, Rotsky reporting several hundred calls a day.

GEORGE ASKS DAD FOR MORE BLANKETS

Spending the entire summer in the woods and being paid for it is the sad lot of George Baker, who operates the Rustic Theatre, in West Yellowstone, Mont. Formerly manager of the Newman, in Kansas City, and now associated with his father, A. F. "Peck" Baker, in the operation of the Electric, Kansas City, Kan., George says he shows twice a night, except Saturdays, when the seats are stacked up and a dance held for the sheepherders, bus drivers and tourists.

Writing home recently, Baker informs the folks that though the fishing is very good (they ought to shoot that guy) he could use more blankets, for the nights are rather chilly.

Hardwick's Street Ballys Aid Him on "Mr. Deeds"

Gag street ballys highlighted Russ Hardwick's "Deeds" campaign at the Lyceum, Clovis, New Mexico, one of which was boy with small tree limb fishing in barrel on busy corner (see photo). At intervals he pulled three-sided sign out of blue-colored water with picture plugs. Barrel was lettered with "If you're fishing for a good time," etc., etc.

Another gag was colored boy walking through streets with sandwich sign copy reading "I laughed 'til I was black in the face," and still another was lad parading about town blowing large bass horn with card carrying copy "You'll be pixilated with laughter when Mr. Deeds Goes to Town."

Two weeks ahead Russ placed a 22-inch by 28-inch hand-lettered art panel in lobby carrying rave notices from papers all over the country, including the HERALD's review. A pixilated contest was also held, winners receiving guest tickets for best nut poems.

TIES "DEATH" DRIVE TO LOCAL CAMPAIGN

Nelson Sponsors Safety Week With City and County Heads For Advance Buildup on Date

If there are fewer auto accidents in Findlay, Ohio, these days, quite a bit of the credit should go to Quigley July Bronze Plaque winner Manager Glenn H. Nelson, of the Warner-Harris Theatre, for his extensive campaign on "And Sudden Death." Nelson missed few angles indeed, promoting his own safety campaign with the cooperation of the only newspaper, police officials and leading citizens.

Starting nine days ahead, Nelson planted the press book wrong-driving contest tied into a careful driving campaign sponsored with city and county police with the county sheriff's office. Paper also ran proclamation from the Mayor and follow-up endorsements from city Safety Director, Safety Council, auto club and police heads. Papers also carried daily box with license numbers of two most careful drivers selected by traffic cops for theatre tickets. These were supplied by leading insurance agency.

The agency was much concerned with the entire campaign, bearing the expense of a lot of it and taking about 100 inches of co-op display advertising in advance and on opening day. Agency then purchased hundreds of tickets given to employees of large oil company together with letters containing safe driving pledges which employees were asked to sign. Letter also contained plug for picture and date. Agency further supplied printed tack cards and one sheets. Other leading companies cooperated similarly.

Featured, too, was a tiein wherein police on stopping drivers guilty of traffic violations and wrong driving practices were given copies of the imprinted Furnas pamphlet and required to read it in presence of the officer. This idea was carried out for an entire week. Same slant was carried out by sheriff's office and state highway patrol.

Nelson's lobby was aimed as a shocker but not to the entire neglect of the romantic angle, his tiein copy reading: "Drive Carefully or you won't see the 1001 romantic thrills in, etc." Surrounding this (see photo) was a poster with photos of wrecks, skeleton head shrouded in sheet hovering over bandaged dummy, all under a green spot.

The safety angle was stressed out front with a badly wrecked and bannered car with copy emphasizing the slant and the date.

Other angles of approach were covered with windows in women's fashion shops, men's clothing stores and jewelry stores. Outside coverage was secured with billing in a 20-mile radius, herald distribution door-to-door, in parked cars and in newspapers and the Furnas pamphlets offered to patrons at theatre well in advance.

Merchants Help Judge Sell "Mr. Deeds"

For the fourth run engagement of "Mr. Deeds" at Loew's Lincoln Square, N. Y. C., John Judge promoted merchant for a candy giveaway; usher stationed on street at bannered desk handing out the sweetmeats in imprinted wrappers. For his street bally John used man leading bannered donkey about town.

Imprinted paper napkins were used in restaurants near theatre, ushers distributed summonses made out with the theatre as the complainant versus The Movie Public, defendant. Inside carried picture copy and cuts of Cooper, Marshall and Michael. Contest blanks were given out, tickets awarded those submitting best answers to "What would you do if you inherited $20,000,000?" Various merchants used window displays and police safety cards were tacked on light posts.

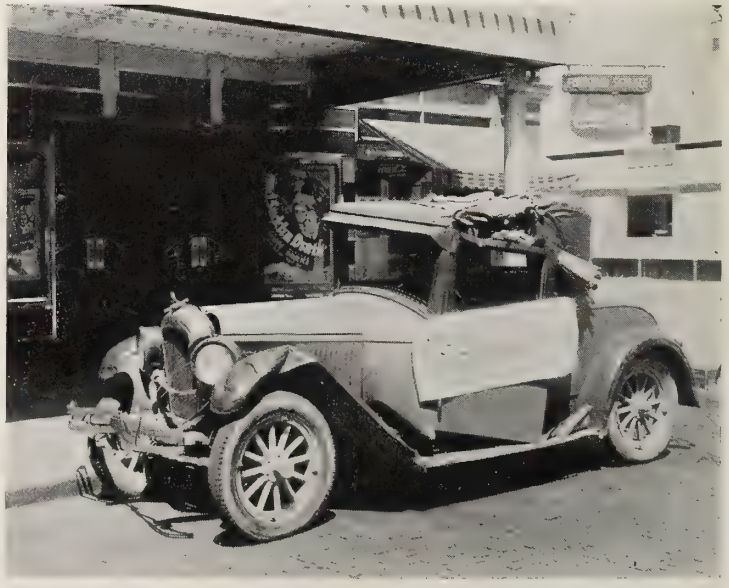
Newspaper Contest Aids "Laughing Eyes" for Zimbalist

One of the first stunts put over by Al Zimbalist when he started at the Regent Theatre, Kearny, N. J., was a contest for "Laughing Irish Eyes" for which he offered guest tickets to those submitting the best photographs of laughing eyes or for letters written to describe gleeful Irish eyes.



Al also staged a men's bathing beauty contest in what he termed his search for a male Mae West. A mistress of ceremonies handled the stunt and in addition to cash prizes, merchandise was promoted from cooperating merchants.

Various Stunts Used By Ralston to Sell Dates

In Hollywood at the Ritz Theatre, some of the recent stunts put on by Howard Ralston were a lobby bar at which free promoted beer was dispensed for "Frankie and Johnnie," bats stencilled on sidewalks for "Dracula's Daughter" and an oversized thermometer atop his marquee with copy reading "Who says it's hot now? See—" etc.

Circularized Special List For "Lonesome Pine" Date

For his "Pasteur" date at the Texas, Smithville, Texas, Boyd F. Scott circularized doctors, dentists, druggists, teachers, etc., using different copy to suit their respective professions. Capsules with plug copy were also distributed.

On "Lonesome Pine," house was dressed with pine trees, grocers' bags imprinted and cards were placed on all flag poles about town.

Harris Distributed Contest Heralds

For "13 Hours by Air," Milt Harris, Loew's publicist, Cleveland, printed heralds containing cut of four of the stars in the picture all wearing goggles. To those correctly identifying the stars, guest tickets were awarded. Milt distributed these heralds at the most important exhibits of the Great Lakes Exposition and inserted them in purchases made at leading department stores.

COVERS MAIN STREET WITH GIANT BANNERS

Holland Hangs 24-Size Signs to Decorate Buildings Ahead of "San Francisco" Engagement

Billing the main street of Elkhart, Ind., with 24-sheet size banners on "San Francisco," is offered as "something new" by Sid Holland, who used the slant in his Quigley July Silver Plaque winning campaign at the Elco Theatre. Described as one of the most novel and effective ideas put over in that sector, the accompanying photo illustrates the slant, Holland planting the banners on every third or fourth building on the main street.

Also done a bit differently was a bathing girl contest and tableau built into the advance campaign for word-of-mouth value. As accompanying photo shows, the girls were lined up on the stage in front of the traveler, the curtain carrying title and starting date. Each girl carried a numbered card, the method employed to find the winner, and when the selection was made, master of ceremonies asked the contestants to name the coming picture. Instead of answering verbally, each girl reversed her card, displaying a letter, all of which spelled out the name of the feature.

There were other contests included and profitable of course was the trip-to-San Francisco tiedin with 11 local merchants who sponsored a round-trip to the Coast city for the greatest number of purchases in a two-week period. Each purchase over 25 cents was good for a coupon carrying figure representing amount of sale and these filled in with name and address were brought to the theatre in sealed envelopes at a designated time. Idea was plugged strongly at the theatre, in full page co-op ads, and of course at the stores.

Holland also planted the movie memory contest from the press book and sold still another slant in his papers by offering passes to those listing the greatest number of U. S. communities made up from the letters of the title, using each letter only as many times as letter appeared in title.

Transportation tieins also clicked leading off with bannered airplane dropping heralds, some containing passes. Auto dealer paid for heralds and imprinting being allowed co-op copy on reverse. Bus company hooked in by giving riders en route to theatre coupons for free ride home when these were stamped by cashier when theatre ticket was bought. Two ballys commanded attention, one a couple in costume of picture riding 1906 Ford and another couple similarly attired on tandem bicycle.

Telephone canvas from downtown window, girls going house-to-house obtaining endorsement signatures for the picture, imprinted laundry cards in shirts, arrow on street poles, jumbo Postal telegrams for windows, radio skits were among other ideas employed, not forgetting hookin with popular grill for a Clark Gable cocktail.

"Are you ready for Fall?"

"What Is Love?" Asks Don In "Flags" Contest

To usher in his "Under Two Flags" campaign at the Colonial Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., Don Williams planted a contest in cooperating newspaper on which he offered guest tickets to those submitting best letters to editor on "What Is Love?"

Ushers were dressed in legionnaire costumes, for his special foyer display Don promoted flags, guns, etc., from local vets post plus two boys in constant attendance at tent, which was dressed with cutouts of Colbert, Russell and McLaglen. Opening day, parade was held headed by two radio cars and a safety campaign truck.

Markle Offers Trophy For Baseball Player

Among the newest stunts put over by Jack Markle, Coolidge Corner Theatre, Brookline, Mass., is tieup effected with local newspaper, theatre offering trophy for the Brookline Twilight Baseball League.

Cardboard votes are given out at the theatre, paper runs a coupon each week for six weeks and the standing every week of the players, plus a story on page one. The ballot box is in the lobby of theatre and votes on most valuable player must either be mailed or brought in. Jack says it places his theatre in the eye of the baseball-minded people, helps the theatre in the community to say nothing of the free publicity for six weeks running.

"Show Boat" Preview Held by George Irwin

For the "Show Boat" date at the Lyceum in Duluth, George Irwin held an advance preview for a representative group of locals, including PTA, critics and teachers groups. Window displays were planted in leading stores, stories with art in newspapers and rotogravure heralds distributed by chain grocery.

Restaurant featured a "Show Boat" southern fried chicken dinner, spot radio announcements were made and an entire false front indirectly lighted with flasher buttons was constructed for the engagement. Song books were given out with each purchase of Maxwell House coffee, as were star photos and George managed to plant a display at the entrance of the ball park when the Duluth team played there.

Various Stunts Used By Sharrock for "Deeds"

Raleigh Sharrock, Palace, Morrilton, Ark., for his "Mr. Deeds" date constructed an entire compo board front (see photo) on which he tucked scene stills from picture, teaser items were run in papers and red public notice cards were tacked about town carrying "prevent pixilation" lines.

Sharrock tied up cleaners, store inserting cards in all packages leaving store reading "We will sew your buttons on free that you burst off laughing at," etc., etc. Co-op ad page was secured , all merchant's ads tying up with picture and as a further buildup contest was planted in papers with tickets going to those correctly answering list of questions pertaining to "pixilation," highlight of the picture.

Radio Contest Sells "Deeds" for Egan

A pixilated teaser contest was planted over local radio station by Pete Egan, Palace, Calgary, Canada, for "Mr. Deeds," guest tickets going to those submitting best answers. Each morning during engagement organ program broadcast from theatre also plugged the contest.

Heralds were distributed by cooperating merchants, snipe cards were planted about town, as were 24-sheets and street car cards.

Personal Endorsement Ads Sell "Deeds" for Kusner

Lou Kusner's "Deeds" campaign at the Warner Apollo, Martinsburg, West Va., was based on the pixilation angle, all tack cards, newspaper ads, novelties, ballyhoos, etc., etc., tied in one way or another to the newly coined word. All ads carried the personal endorsement of the manager, teaser ads were run in classified section, and Lou flooded the town with tack cards reading, "Martinsburg will be pixilated when 'Mr. Deeds Goes to Town.'"

For his street bally boy covered business sections walking in barrel with imprinted copy reading, "I'm pixilated, I lost my pants laughing," etc., etc. Paper napkins were placed in leading restaurants and letters spelling out title were dropped from plane circling city.

Don Austin, Glen City Theatre, Santa Paula, Cal., for his "First Baby" date started his campaign by calling a circle of friends and giving them the following chatter: "Hello, Jack, This Is Don Austin; we're having our first Baby Wednesday night and suggest that you come over," etc.

Houston Managers Engage In Civic Club Activities

Theatremen Participate in Community Movements; Efficient Management Found General

by BESS W. SCOTT
from Houston, Texas

When President Franklin Roosevelt visited Houston in June and sailed on a pleasure craft down the deep sea channel from Port Houston to Galveston, 50 miles distant on the Gulf of Mexico, he said with his famous smile: "How like Houston to build a submarine base 50 miles from the ocean!"

The President was only echoing the opinion of the entire South regarding Houston, whose enterprise and resourcefulness are exemplified in her inland port—the largest cotton port in the world—where "17 railroads meet the sea"; her astounding development in oil, shipping, rice growing, ranching in her coastal plains, and dairy farming; her 104 churches, 109 public schools, two universities, sky scrapers, fine hotels and beautiful theatres.

When Houston doubled her population in 10 years—from 1920 to 1930, according to federal census—she also doubled her resources and kept pace with her building and industries. During that period her three small theatres were increased to four large, modern, first run downtown theatres and four suburbans. In the six years since, one beautiful downtown theatre has been added, and five modern suburban theatres erected.

All told in Houston now are seven downtown and nine suburban theatres for whites, with a combined seating capacity of 16,000, and four theatres for negroes seating 4,500.

Center of Oil Fields

Founded in 1836, the year Texas won her freedom from Mexico at the famous battle of San Jacinto, fought just 20 miles from the Houston city limits, this city was named for the hero of that battle, General Sam Houston, later the first president of the republic of Texas. The little settlement was started by the Allen Brothers, New York land promoters, in opposition to the two-year-old Harrisburg, four miles up the bayou, when the Harrises refused to take the Allens into partnership, and flourished from the beginning under the approval of Sam Houston. The state capitol was moved here after two years, through President Houston's influence, and stood where the city's largest hotel, the Rice, now stands. The Rice and four others of the finest hotels in the city are owned by Jesse H. Jones, Houston capitalist and chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Committee.

No city in this Centennial state has grown in progress, romance and tradition as has Houston through the century of freedom which Texas is celebrating this year. Always the commercial center of East and South Texas, the inland channel of 50 miles from the Gulf has made Houston one of the most important shipping points in America, and the largest cotton port in the world. In lumber and grain, and in sugar products the shipping tonnage is also enormous and commercially important.

That Houston has doubled her population in the last ten years and points with pride to skyscraper buildings, up to 34 floors in height, due to the "black gold" thereabouts, accounts, no doubt, in no small part for the fact that the Texas key city is called a good show town. The satisfactory state of the local boxoffices may also be said to be due to the high class of theatremen and their willingness to get behind activities aimed for the betterment of the Southern city which is this week's stop in the Showman's Travelog series.

—A-MIKE VOGEL

Black gold has played its part in the growth of Houston, as in most of the cities of the state. Within a 100-mile radius of the largest oil fields in the state, the city is the metropolis of the oil industry. The Gulf Refining Company has a 34-story building on Main street; the Humble Oil Company has recently added another wing to their 15-story building, covering three-fourths of a city block. The Shell Oil Company owns a 22-story building, and the 21-story Petroleum building houses the offices of other oil companies. Within 25 miles of Houston are the refineries of the Humble Oil Company at Baytown, the Shell at Deer Park, the Sinclair refineries at Pasadena, the Texas Company at Galena Park, the Texas Gulf Producing Company at Barger's Hill, Strake Oil Company of Conroe, and distributing centers of other companies.

Bound up inseparably with the colorful early history of Texas, Houston not only has the field of the state's greatest battle, San Jacinto, in her very back yard, but is within a 200-mile radius of all of the famous stands of Texas heroes—the Alamo, Goliad, Velasco, Gonzales and many others. Centennial visitors this year find Houston a focal spot for visiting every spot in the section of the state known as "The Cradle of Liberty," and is also but 75 miles from "The Athens of Texas"—Old Washington, where the Declaration of Independence was signed in 1836, and where the first institution of higher learning in Texas was built while Texas was still a republic. This was Baylor University, now located at Waco.

MORE PINE. Another neat example of the use of pinewood for lobby decoration on "Lonesome Pine" from the studio of Manager George Laby, Paramount, Springfield, Mass. Very woodsy, eh?

Winding bayous, pine forests, state parks, immense city parks, tropical flowers and foliage, natural lakes and excellent highways made Houston one of the most beautiful cities of the South, and a favorite playground for tourists. The mild winter climate and long Indian summer, with fine golf courses and the bay resorts just 25 miles distant over concrete highways, lure winter visitors from the north and east. The famous bluebonnet fields of spring are almost within the city limits.

Three airports, including the municipal port, offering passenger service twice daily; 17 railroads and the port where passenger ships sail for the tropics, are Houston assets.

Called "Best" Theatre Town

While Houston is not a factory city, within the past 12 months three eastern firms have built branch factories on the ship channel, and others are scheduled to come in. In building Houston has led the cities of the state for 12 months, and bank clearings surpass those of any other city in Texas. The PWA-public school $3,821,450 building program has been under way since January, employing an average of 1,000 men per month. Other PWA and WPA projects have made unemployment for skilled labor a thing of the past, and materially lessened the problem of unemployment for unskilled labor.

Skilled labor receives an average of $1.00 per hour, with the unskilled averaging $4 per day. White collar workers are far in the majority in Houston, the average wage estimated at $20 to $25 per week. While Houston has a large negro population, the city provides one of the finest school systems in the south for the negro youth, having three high schools, three junior high schools, and 14 elementary, and a four-year municipal university for negroes. Three teachers in the negro schools hold Ph. D. degrees, and all are college graduates. The Houston Independent school system for whites and negroes consists of 236 square miles, 109 schools with 70,000 scholastics, municipal universities for white and colored with a combined enrollment of 2,500.

EFFICIENCY MARKS OPERATION

During the years of the depression Houston held its reputation as "the best theatre town in Texas." Theatres are well patronized, from the smallest to the largest, week by week, but few runs are out of the ordinary or justify a holdover of programs. Except for road shows played occasionally through the winter at the Majestic, an Interstate theatre, stage shows are out of the running in Houston. The Helen Hayes, Walter Huston and other good stage plays, however, are sold out before they arrive, and although Houstonians have always had a reputation of "sitting on their hands" their dollars speak applause in liberal measure.

Road show pictures, however, usually starve to death in Houston. "The Great Ziegfeld," "Midsummer Night's Dream" and others have been disappointments here the past winter and spring. Stars are the greatest drawing cards in pictures for Houston patrons, but directors are becoming better known, thanks to advertising methods of the local theatres.

The Interstate Theatres, Inc., headed by Karl Hoblitzelle of Dallas, and operating under a contract with Publix-Paramount, former owners, own three of the four first run theatres in Houston, and five suburbans. Loew's State in Houston is the only Loew's theatre in the state of Texas, and has the choice Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer products literally sewed up. They are not released for subsequent run theatres, so must be seen at Loew's State or not at all. Loew's State is also the largest theatre in the city, seating 2,700, which is 1,000 more than the Interstate's largest, the Metropolitan.

Institutional Events Celebrated

Will Horwitz, nationally known theatre figure because of his eccentricities and enterprise, has exclusive control of the downtown subsequent run business, with his Texan, Iris, Ritz and his new ultra modern Uptown. In the past year Mr. Horwitz has spent thousands remodeling the Texan and the Iris, building the Uptown, and connecting the first two theatres by a tunnel under the street, and the last two by means of a right angle, air-cooled arcade through the block. The Horwitz chain, known as the Horwitz Homefolks Theatres, have prices from 15 cents to 25, and five cents all the time for children. These shows have a consistent and assured clientele, regardless of the picture shown. They employ girl ushers in neat white military uniforms with black and gold trimmings, and cash in on the reputation of welcoming children and giving them the best of care while their mothers shop. They run all products except M-G-M and are protected by a 30-day contract.

Annual features of the Horwitz theatres that have become an "institution" in Houston are the Christmas party and tree for all children of the city, and substantial gifts for the underprivileged youngsters, and the June all day, city wide birthday party at the Iris for children under 12 years. These two parties are said to cost Mr. Horwitz $6,000 annually. An average attendance at the Christmas party is 25,000 youngsters, and the Iris party in June drew 15,000 children.

Prices at the first run Interstate theatres are 25 to 50 cents for the Metropolitan and Majestic, and 15 to 35 for the Kirby, a house with 1,450 seating capacity and split week policy on pictures. Loew's State holds to a 15 to 40 cent policy. The suburban theatres charge 15 and 25 cents. There are four independently owned suburban theatres in the city, the most important being the Boulevard, owned by F. D. Wilke.

Parking Meters Installed

Transportation offers no problems to Houston patrons, but the parking conditions for two years have been growing in seriousness. Very recently parking meters have been installed in downtown areas, and seem to be an answer to some of the parking difficulties for the merchants, but do not help theatre patrons. The Metropolitan has free parking for its patrons, and the Horwitz Theatres offer a four-story parking building, free to patrons. The suburban theatres, without exception have free parking. But traffic conditions in Houston are notoriously bad, and the parking problem, in spite of the fact that there are several parking lots within the downtown area, at prices from 10 to 25 cents, it still to be solved.

Bank night, screeno and the other build-ups prevalent in cities of Texas and the South, did not reach Houston until 1936. Then last January the Interstate, having found Bank Night profitable in Dallas and other centers, introduced it at the Kirby. Soon the Horwitz shows and others were competing, and Interstate extended the drawing privilege to patrons of all the Interstate theatres on the regular Bank Night.

Horwitz started two Bank Nights a week in opposition, but found this unprofitable. Then he withdrew the chance game altogether, and plastered his lobbies with placards denouncing "cheap skate gambling" in theatres, etc. The opposition gave no heed, and within a month Horwitz had started free lottery drawings in the street, with police permit, in front of his Uptown and Texan. There, one night each week, the pot is put up, and merchandizing prizes also, and drawings held. Tickets may be obtained from the Horwitz theatre box offices without buying a ticket, and from many stores in on the promotion.

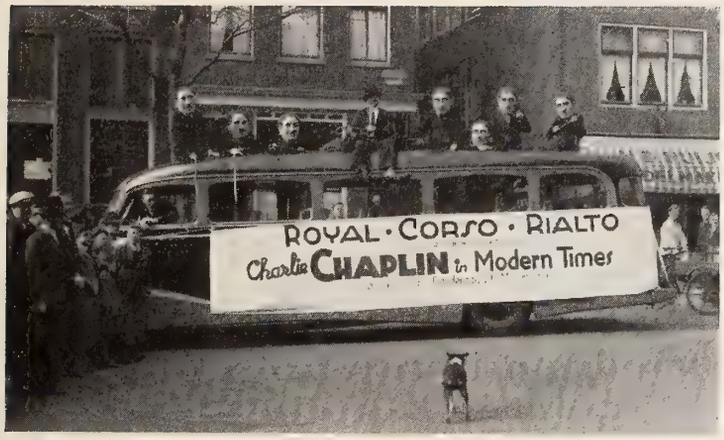
NEAT WINDOW. During the entire run of "White Angel" at the RKO Mainstreet, Kansas City, Mo., Lawrence Lehman, manager, and exploiteer Lou Mayer planted this display on "whites" in leading department store window.

Theatre operation is held at a high point of perfection in Houston, and theatre service is of the best. Efficient management marks all of the theatres, with courtesy and efficiency the watchword. E. E. Collins, city manager for Interstate, and Eddie Bremer, manager of the Kirby and a theatre man of Houston for 30 years, are active members of the Houston Rotary Club. Homer McCallon, publicity director for Loew's State, is a popular golfer and sportsman of Houston. Mr. Horwitz has a suburban estate at Dickinson, 20 miles from Houston, that is a show place, and is widely known in the state. The theatre men thus mix with the business men of Houston, and are called by civic club members by their first names.

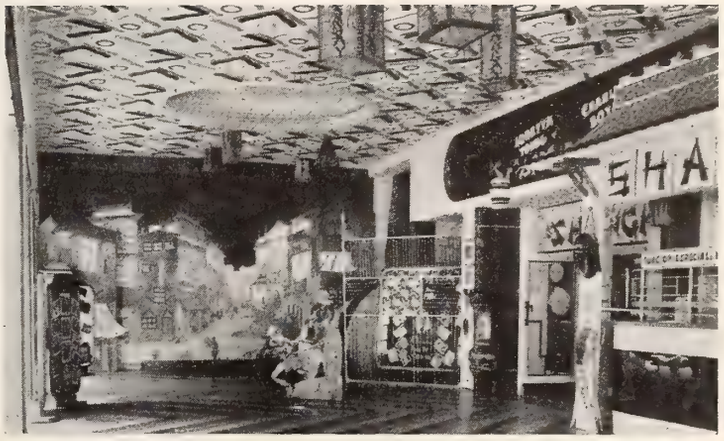
Newspaper advertising is the greatest medium of exploitation for Houston theatres, and ballyhoo has been reduced to a minimum. An occasional sound truck, weekly changes in fronts to which the staff artists give much thought, and occasional tieups with local companies used.

Houston Newspapers Friendly



Newspapers are friendly to the theatres, and give liberal publicity space. The three dailies have critics who run daily columns and reviews under by-lines, and the two Sunday papers use many pictures. On the other hand, the theatres buy liberal space on Sundays, and daily, and throw much national advertising to the papers. Each of the papers run a daily theatre calendar, listing downtown and suburban attractions.

Hubert Roussel, critic for The Press, a Scripps-Howard paper, is considered one of the cleverest writers in the state. He had the distinction recently of being quoted in Time Magazine. The three papers also use syndicated Hollywood columns.



Little opposition in amusements is offered theatres in Houston, although Gulf and bay resorts cut in on summer receipts to some extent. Night baseball is played in season, but does little to theatre receipts. A three weeks' horse racing season twice each winter offers some competition, and a weekly boxing bout competes with opening of new pictures Friday nights. The Houston Symphony orchestra is growing in favor, and has come to be a matter of municipal pride and patronage. The Rice hotel roof garden books nationally known orchestras.

Houston remains a good show town, with the average patron attending a theatre at least once in two weeks, and perhaps oftener, according to estimates. Houston has a population of 350,000, and most of them between the ages of eight and fifty are picture fans. Houston theatres made a profit on the whole during the worst years of the depression, and the box offices now are joining in the chorus of "happy days are here again."

SOME OVERSEAS EXPLOITATIONS

THEY'RE ALL CHARLIES. For the date on "Modern Times" at the Royal, Corso, and Rialto Theatres in Amsterdam, Holland, Manager C. Miemus of the Royal arranged this bally of Chaplins from the famed Dutch Dickson Ballet.

SHANGHAI STREET SCENE. Lobby of the Cine Monumental, Rosario, Argentine, was transformed into street scene for display on Paramount's "Shanghai" by theatre's impresarios Senors Gutierrez and Paramount manager, Romeo Bianchi.

TRAVELING BOVINES. Bannered cutout bovine floats trundled through Barcelona, Spain, boulevards drew people and pesetas to the Coliseum Theatre during the run of "Via Lactea" (The Milky Way), says correspondent Plummer.

ANIMATED CHAPLIN WINDOW. One of the most original window displays in London was this animation arranged by Francis Meynell, United Artists' publicity head, for "Modern Times" at the Tivoli. Display was 30 feet long.

LARGEST BOARD. Reported by Leon Britton, of Peacock Motion Picture Co., to be one of the largest to be put up in Shanghai was this 50-foot poster on Radio's "Top Hat" for date at the Metropol Theatre, copy in English and Chinese.

STOCKHOLM FRONT. Display at the Rialto Theatre, Stockholm, Sweden, typical of the fronts used also at the Rivoli, Rita and Ritz, of the Ri circuit in the same city, for day and date runs on Warners' "Captain Blood."

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

Glory be, the mercury has dropped from its accustomed 105 down to 71, but no moisture has dropped for 40 days and 40 nights. Will someone please give us the permanent address of a gentleman by the name of Noah? We have emerged forth from our basement like a groundhog and still are nursing one of the sorest toes in history. Some people are drawing pensions for having been shot up in the Argonne woods or having eaten corned willie on the Marne, but we will bet they never lost a big toe nail on the Elkhorn.

We are hobbling around with enough bandages on our foot to start a drygoods store and some evil-minded people are suggested that we are going to make application for a disability pension, and some mercenary minded folks are asking if we are going to try and get on relief. The relief we want is to be able to throw these ——— crutches away and to kick the doctor and tell him to go jump in the Elkhorn. Doggone the doggone luck anyhow. Say Gertie, you will please excuse us for being a little out of humor this morning, for our angelic disposition has gone haywire.

Our nurse got April Shower out of the garage and took us down to the Moon theatre to see Shirley Temple in "Poor Little Rich Girl," and expressing our foggy opinion, we would say that this one merits a full house and will give pretty general satisfaction although we don't regard it as Shirley's best. But we do regard it as good enough for the price of admission.

From our good friend, Mr. H. Rankin, away back at Tilbury, Ontario, comes a letter thanking us for our letter to him of July 16th and, among other things, he says that the heat has broken and that he is putting in his spare time horseback riding and sailing his yacht on the briny deep, and asks how we would like to join him. He closes his letter by saying, "Even the beer is better in Canada." That's right, rub it in: tell us about your sailing on the cool waters and that you have better beer, while we have to suffer in silence (with the exceptions of a few choice sentences not considered good in the Sunday School).

Mr. Rankin operates the Plaza theatre at Tilbury and we judge that the Tilbury folks don't have to go away to see a good show. He is playing the picture of the Dionne Quintuplets and, from the billing he sent us, we judge he is putting it over in a big way. He addressed us in care of the Herald at New York, and right here we want to advise you boys that our permanent address is Neligh, Nebraska, and a letter sent to us at that address will save the Herald boys the trouble of forwarding it, although they are pretty accommodating down there. Thanks, Mr. Rankin, for your letter.

We notice that some expert writers back east, who pretend to know all about it, tell us that the conditions in the Middlewest are not as bad as generally understood. People can't sit in an office in New York and tell what a cornfield looks like in South Dakota, their eyesight isn't that good.

In some spots the wheat was fairly good because it matured before the dry, hot weather set in, but as for corn, except for a few situations, can be considered gone, and what we mean, it is gone too.

If you want correct information about the crops ask somebody west of the Mississippi River.

This long spell of dry hot weather is going to increase the demand for dogs for that shelterbelt. We can see that right now. This town could spare a lot of 'em.

We wish we could remember the name of that lady who wrote us once from Houston, Texas. As we recall it she was on the editorial staff of one of the Houston papers. We would like to hear from her again, that is, if there is no husband, but we don't want to get tangled up with any of these husbands. Some of 'em don't use good judgment.

We may be laboring under a delusion, but as we see it, the producers will have to make a drastic reduction in film rental to some of the theatres in this burned up district or they will be forced to close. This may not sound good but we should look the facts squarely in the face regardless. Rainbows seldom appear except after a rain.

But then, maybe we shouldn't have said that the outlook for business was bad out here in the Middlewest; maybe we should have said that business was good; that we would have excellent crops, etc., etc., and maybe we should have left it to the expert writers to state the conditions of the rural sections from a metropolitan viewpoint, and then maybe again we should be guided by what Will Pfrimmer, the Indiana poet once wrote:

Or shall the sparrow cease to sing
While mocking birds are caroling?

Those letters from Shine Mason of McAllen, Bob Smith of Mission, Texas, John Piller of Valley City, North Dakota, Bert Silver of Greenville, Michigan, W. H. Brenner of Winchester, Indiana, and a lot more of the boys—but then, when we come to think about it, we didn't get any.

We would like again to call the attention of you exhibitors to the importance of reporting to the department "What the Picture Did For Me." Some few people may not care so much for it. A few of us are not overly crazy about lobster salad but a large bulk of the people are strong for it and it is said to be a mighty good dish. Personally we would prefer huckleberry pie.

And now, if the nurse will bring us those crutches we will try and hobble out on the veranda and get a little fresh air, for its cool this morning.

Two Reel Shortage

Statistically minded exhibitors, this week, were pondering the possibility of a two-reel shortage occurring in this territory. Because most film districts are double feature areas, a slash in two reel production has already been indicated in the 1936-1937 announcements.

New Standard Reel Ready; Warning Issued on Takeup

WITH BRANCHES of all the major distributing companies ready to begin service September 1 on 2000-foot reels, two large cities—Boston and Chicago—remain doubtful as to the acceptance of the new standard length. In Boston there has been no assurance that any extension of the present 1000-foot reel will be permitted, while in Chicago the authorities insist on continuance of the 15-5 reel which has come into use there through doubling of 1000-foot lengths, instead of the reel (diameter 14½ inches, hub 4½ inches) which has been adopted by the distributors on recommendation of the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

Objections in Boston to the new standard, early voiced by the projectionists' union there, threaten to take the form of a bill before the next Massachusetts legislature, under the sponsorship of the State safety commission. That body has consented to a meeting, however, and will hear arguments for the longer reel early in September.

Where service cannot be provided on the larger reels, due either to regulations or facilities of the theatre, the longer prints can be cut and adapted to the former standard reels, such a situation having been provided for by the editing and marking specifications drawn up by the Research Council and adopted by the producers.

A large number of theatres will be affected, however, by a condition pointed out in a warning just issued by Herbert Griffin, vice president of the International Projector Corporation. He has stated that in order to avoid extra rewinding and attendant confusion and extra labor in the projection room, a new take-up pulley for the lower magazine of Simplex equipment is necessary in theatres using reels of 2-inch or 5-inch hubs, because the present takeup will not provide proper speed to take up the film during the first few turns. New pulleys have been placed in production and are available at a nominal cost.

Theatre Limit Law Delayed Until Election

WHETHER OR not Oconto, small town in Northern Wisconsin, shall have more than one theatre for each 5,000 population, will be determined by the people at the next city election in April, 1937. This action was taken by the city's common council following a petition signed by nearly 700 voters.

The ordinance was passed by the common council in June, following reports that a circuit operator was planning to erect a new theatre in Oconto. The measure provides that only one license for each 5,000 population may be issued by the common council provided the additional licensee will expend not less than $25,000 for theatre and equipment.

It also provides that no theatre may be conducted in any location within the city where the side walls or front entrance of the theatre is within 150 feet of any gasoline filling station.

A. L. Merritt, an independent exhibitor, controls the Oconto situation with his Gem and Princess theatres. The former is dark, while the latter has been renovated and renamed the Oconto. It is believed this action has been taken in view of the fact that the New Oconto Operating Company was the firm planning to build another house in that city.

Several other Wisconsin cities, including Baraboo and Sturgeon Bay, have similar ordinances. In Ashland last year a similar measure was passed by the common council, but later was vetoed by the mayor. It marks the first time in Wisconsin that the measure will be presented to the people at a regular city election and promises to become quite an issue in the voting in Oconto. All the Wisconsin cities with ordinances of this kind have a population of approximately 5,000.

RCA to Service Fox Houses, Many with WE

SERVICING OF sound equipment in more than 300 theatres in the Midwest and West operated by the Fox theatre companies, will be done by RCA Photophone engineers beginning October 1, under a five-year contract just announced. Most of these theatres, it is stated, have Western Electric sound systems; a few of them have DeForest equipment.

F. B. Ostman, RCA service manager, states that this is the first contract RCA Photophone has taken for the servicing of competitive equipment. Under the arrangement, service engineers will make periodic checkup calls and be available for emergency service without charge. Mr. Osterman announced that 20 additional sound engineers are to be added to the staff as a result of this assignment, while provisions are being made for the stocking of spare parts at convenient locations throughout the country. Among the latest test instruments with which the engineers will be equipped is a cathode ray oscillograph, which indicates the presense of a fault in the system on a fluorescent screen.

The theatre groups included in the provisions of the contract are the Fox West Coast, the Fox Intermountain, the Fox Columbia and the Wisconsin Amusement Company circuits.

New Theatre Added As Third Major Project

FOR THE THIRD time during the last eleven months, Balaban & Katz announce a major theatre project. Work is scheduled to be started shortly on a 1,500 seat cinema, designed by Periera & Periera, Chicago architects, at the Northwest corner of Cermak Road and Wesley avenue in Berwyn. Fronting 107 feet on Cermak and 125 on Wesley avenue, the new house will be built on extremely modern lines, with lighting effects on the walls and elimination of sharp corners to accentuate its streamlined exterior. It will be called the Wesley.

The walls and ceiling of the auditorium will be of acoustic plaster in plum and gold tints. The foyer and lounges will be of veneered woods and marble. All the carpets and interior fittings and fixtures are to be specially designed by the architects to harmonize with the decorating scheme. All lights will be concealed.

The exterior walls will be of a light colored material, especially adapted to natural light, with trim of buff and brown shades, according to the architects.

Work is scheduled to be started within 60 days, with the expectation of having it ready for Berwyn patrons in the spring of 1937. The cost is placed at $250,000.

The Wesley will be the second Balaban and Katz theatre in Berwyn. This circuit recently extensively remodeled the Berwyn theatre, a few blocks away. B & K's Will Rogers theatre is nearing completion at Belmont and Central avenues. In Evanston, the Main theatre, recently acquired by B & K, is to be remodeled and enlarged.

Carrying forward a program for complete remodeling of Warner Chicago theatres, James E. Coston, zone manager, has announced plans for modernization of the West Englewood in Sixty-third St. near Ashland avenue, to cost approximately $75,000. The work will be started this year.

From plans by Periera & Periera, with

B. B. Buchanan as consultant, the entire cinema is to be rebuilt. The lobby, front and foyer will be done in a modernistic manner with a complete change of lighting, structure, furnishings and decoration. The name of the theatre will be changed to Ogden.

After undergoing $20,000 worth of remodeling, the Maywood theatre in Hammond, Ind., will reopen on September 15 as the Rio theatre, according to R. Levine & Company, the architects. The house will be operated by the Cooney Brothers, formerly owners of the Avalon and Capitol theatres in Chicago.

Cooling Sought Through Mere Ultra-High Velocity

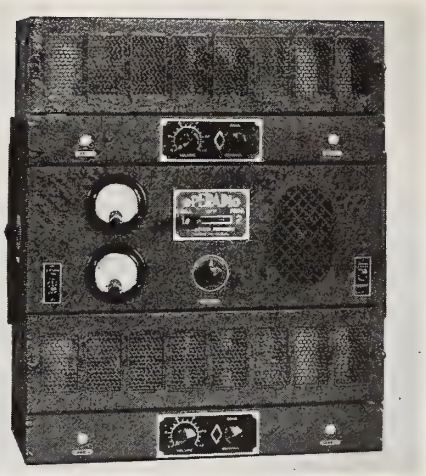
AN AIR-CONDITIONING installation of special interest because of the dependence for cooling effect on the high velocity at which the air is introduced into the auditorium, is that recently completed in the Colonial theatre in Canaan, Conn., owned and operated by Anthony Boscardin. The installation was made under the supervision of J. J. Ferretti, for the United States Air-Conditioning Corporation.

The equipment consists in a blower, motor, special automatic dampers (Kooler-Aire "Equalizers"), copper heating core, and two dual deflectors, besides the ducts.

The Colonial theatre building is over 15 years old, and the air-conditioning installation was made in connection with general remodeling. The seating capacity is only 500.

The blower capacity of the system is 24,000 cubic feet per minute, and the air is distributed by means of two ducts leading to two deflectors, one at each side of the proscenium arch. Immediately behind the deflectors the equalizing dampers have been installed to maintain constant velocity, controlling distribution in accordance with the amount of cooling effect required.

The air is exhausted through the lobby and also through two exhaust ducts leading to the outside at each rear corner of the theatre. The air change period is approximately 2½ minutes, with both supply and exhaust figured to be about equal.



Ventilating equipment is located in a false ceiling above the stage, and it draws air from the outside at a northern exposure. Thus the coolest air available is blown into the auditorium at a high velocity and completely changed every 2½ minutes.

Produce Natural Marble That Is Translucent

RESEARCHES conducted at the Mellon Institute of Industrial Research have resulted in the production of a natural marble that is translucent, its colorations and grain taking on added beauty when lighted from behind. The marble has been marketed by the Vermont Marble Company under the name of "Lumar."

Only certain marbles are suitable. Ordinary electric bulbs are used as the source of light. The marble is sufficiently translucent so that high wattages are not necessary. Artificial light sources are not always required, however, and the window panels comparable to the stained glass in architectural use are available.

"Lumar" is obtainable in a wide range of colors and types and in each product the internal coloring may be brought out in every degree from a dull warm glow to a brilliant radiance. It is also procurable in several thicknesses and translucencies, and is adaptable to both exteriors and interiors. It is particularly indicated for theatre fronts, lobbies and foyers.

Dual channel theatre amplifier with a reserve unit recently brought out by the Operadio Manufacturing Company of St. Charles, Ill. The reserve unit is for instant emergency use in the event of failure of the operating unit, guarding against possibility of a silent screen. This amplifier has a tone control adjustment for variations in recording and to peculiarities of response to high or low frequencies. It operates with any soundhead using standard photocells. The tube complement is two 77's, one 75, two 6B5's, and one 83. An Operadio rectifier unit can also be supplied for direct current.

More Seats Wired For Hearing Aids

INCREASED recognition of the place of hearing aids in the modern theatre is shown by recent large-scale installations. Electrical Research Products announce the wiring of 60 seats in the new Ritz Theatre at Talladega, Ala. Dictograph Products report completion of a 50-seat Acousticon installation in the Riverside Theatre of Milwaukee.

Other recent Acousticon installations are at the Broadway Theatre, San Diego, 5 outlets; Cabrillo Theatres, Inc., San Diego, 5 outlets; Forum Theatre, Los Angeles, 16 outlets.

New Device to Clean Film in the Projector

A PROJECTOR DEVICE for cleaning film has been developed, called the "Film Treatizer." It mounts between the upper magazine and the projector head, and the film passes through it. A sloping extension arm holds, in front of the upper magazine, a glass container of cleaning fluid, which feeds through flexible conduits to the mechanism proper, and impregnates absorbent pads that press lightly against the passing film. These pads are inexpensive, and so mounted that they can be changed without trouble as often as they become dirty—in extreme cases after every reel.

Marked Reduction In Simplex Prices

A SUBSTANTIAL reduction in the price of the Super-Simplex projector has been announced, coincidentally with withdrawal from the market of the older Simplex mechanism with front or rear shutter. Concentration of production on the Super-Simplex and Simplex Acme models, eliminating the earlier style which the Super-Simplex replaces, makes possible greater efficiency in operation, it is stated, and lower price for the improved mechanism.

Catalogue Celebrates Fortieth Anniversary

A NEW AND enlarged catalogue issued by Kliegl Brothers, their Catalogue No. 40, marks the company's fortieth year of service in illumination. Front cover illustrations contrast the dingy shop of 1896 with the impressive building of today. The booklet, containing 96 pages, describes the complete line of Kliegl lighting equipment in word and picture.

Decorating the Theatre According to Its Functions

● A nationally known designer of theatre interiors speaks out for the use of modern schemes as peculiarly adapted to a cinema's requirements

By HAROLD W. RAMBUSCH

PRODUCERS OF motion pictures are rightly interested in revealing to the public the inner operation of the studio, showing the actors at work and the studios in operation, as they are or are supposed to be. The public likes to know about the people and processes of the show. And the backstage of a motion picture theatre is not behind the screen but in Hollywood.

Only the "legitimate" theatre has a true backstage. The very want and absence of this feature in the film theatre creates its own hiatus. We all like to feel that there is a backstage, and it may seem quite logical, therefore, to attempt to supply this element in the form of an illusion. The general tendency accordingly has been to pull the stage out into the house, and the house out into the street, and the street back into the theatre.

In bringing the stage out into the house we find the stage effects, lights and drapes carried out into the body of the auditorium, with resulting greater richness, more color and, above all, those lighting effects which for years we have seen in back of the footlights only. This means colored lights and lighting effects well out into the auditorium, all carefully guarded against those reflections which are so inimical to the picture itself.

In this very effort and in the light of our modern, scientific architectural developments, we find created new forms of architecture, all predicated upon the use of light in architecture. The forms are built for light. It is architecture built around light and color rather than light and color applied to architecture. It means the integration of the building rather than the frightful results we saw only a few years ago when electric lights were applied behind cornices and coves of historical architectural forms, resulting in shades and shadows which made the very orders of architecture unrecognizable.

ACOUSTICS

To the problems of the eye and the light have been added those of the ear and sound. However, these problems, truly faced, result in new possibilities. They simply represent fields for inventive genius and talent. Cloth and damask panels were used as soon as the deluxe theatres appeared, but they were used only for appearance sake. Now they have functional necessities, and we find effective patterns and textures either in wall coverings or draperies, all toward the end that the sound may be at its best, yet carrying also decorative possibilities and an emotional effect.

TEXTURE

Few people fully realize the emotional possibilities of texture, color and light. The general public may not realize the extent to which the various structural surfacings, plasters, wallboards and tiles have been added to the repertory of textiles to insure the ultimate in sound, but they are there nevertheless, and their general characteristic is one of a rougher, more textured surface, giving depth and quality to the eye in the form of color, as well as proper absorption of sound. More felt than seen are that depth and two-dimensional color which is the result of the textured surfaces so characteristic of sound-absorbing materials.

FORM

The general public is quite conscious of the appearance of distinctly contemporary style of architecture, and there are few better examples of this tendency than the theatre itself. We call it the modern style; the architects call it functional design. The fact remains that it is based on a scientific evaluation of materials. Since the theatre, of all modern buildings, is probably the most scientific in its necessities, it is quite natural that the theatre, should be the very exemplification of functional architecture; functional from many points of view—light, sound and structure, which all have an effect on form and surface.

The theatre is, probably, the only truly original form that modern architecture has created—this largely because its function represents the only truly new requirement. We still live in the same kind of houses; we sleep, eat and rest in the same way people did centuries ago. Our churches, particularly the ritualistic ones, have not changed at all in their requirements.

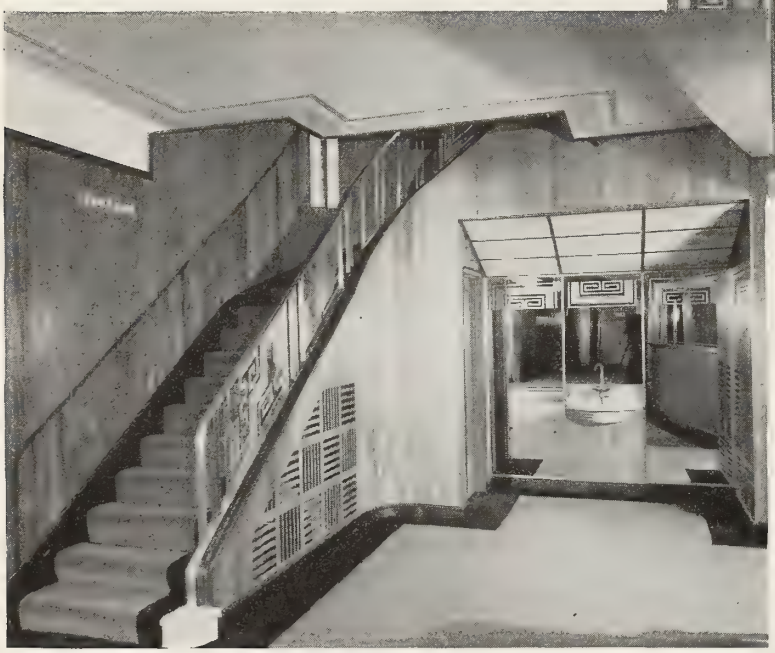
ILLUMINATION

Though the theatre has created its own form and style, even back to the time of the legitimate house, there has entered a new element based largely on the psychology of our modern audience—the public's insatiable desire for entertainment without pause or interruption. The answer of the motion picture to this problem is its continuous show, with no interruptions.

Thus we have an always-dimmed house. The corollary, it would seem, is a house that recognizes this and looks its best under its most natural condition—semi-darkness. This also explains the use of colored lights in our theatre auditoriums. The various parts can never be as strong as the whole, and we still love light, so we have red light, blue light and amber light, all giving pleasant effects and tones, never as harsh and brilliant as the pure white light the public once suffered from. There may, however, be another weighty argument for this great use of color and light. It might be the natural need and yearning for a setting for our pictures of black and white. As long as there was color on the stage the need for color in the house was not so apparent. If and when we get the truly successful colored pictures there will, undoubtedly, be a change in the treatment of the auditorium which now forms a colored setting for a black and white picture. We may, with the coming of the colored pictures, find ourselves returning to the chiaroscuro of the Italian Renaissance.

OUTSIDE THE AUDITORIUM

If a case has been made for the modern, as a result of necessity in the house and auditorium, based on functionalism and its necessities, it cannot be similarly maintained with respect to lounges, foyers, retiring rooms and the like, where the problems of motion picture exhibition no longer exist. Here we naturally find that type of modern which relates itself to the human being, his comfort and his appearance. The modern theatre has long striven to let the pauper feel himself king for a day and to supply, if only for a brief period, that feeling of luxury which is absent in the majority of homes.



As the dazzle of the stage and highlights has made a very modest encroachment upon the auditorium of the theatre, it has made a forceful and emphatic appearance upon the street. Bright signs and dazzling marquees seem to have moved the old "legitimate" stage out to the street. We have long seen the bright signs and vestibules, but as the stage is moved outward,

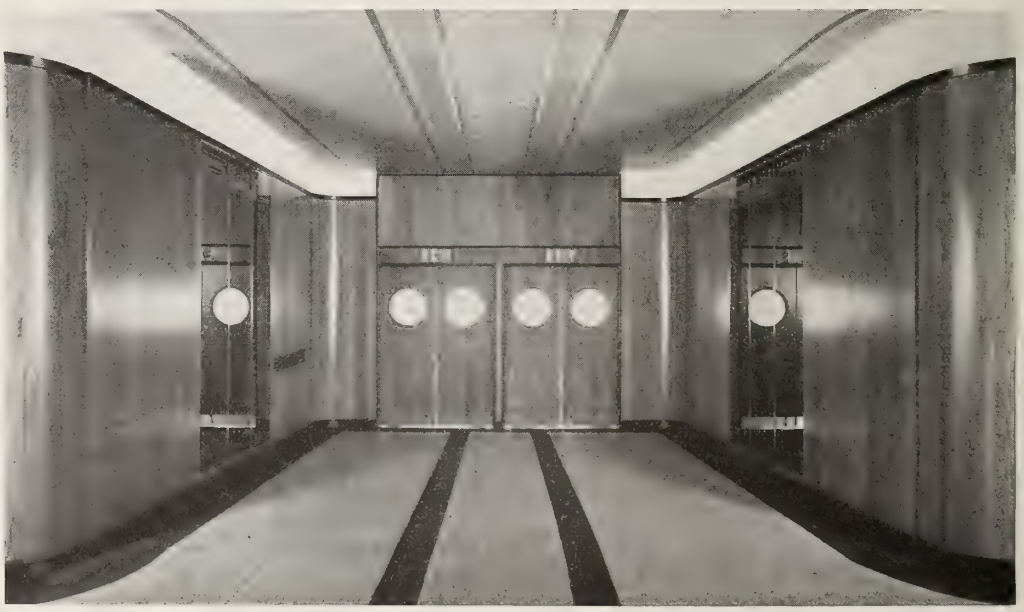
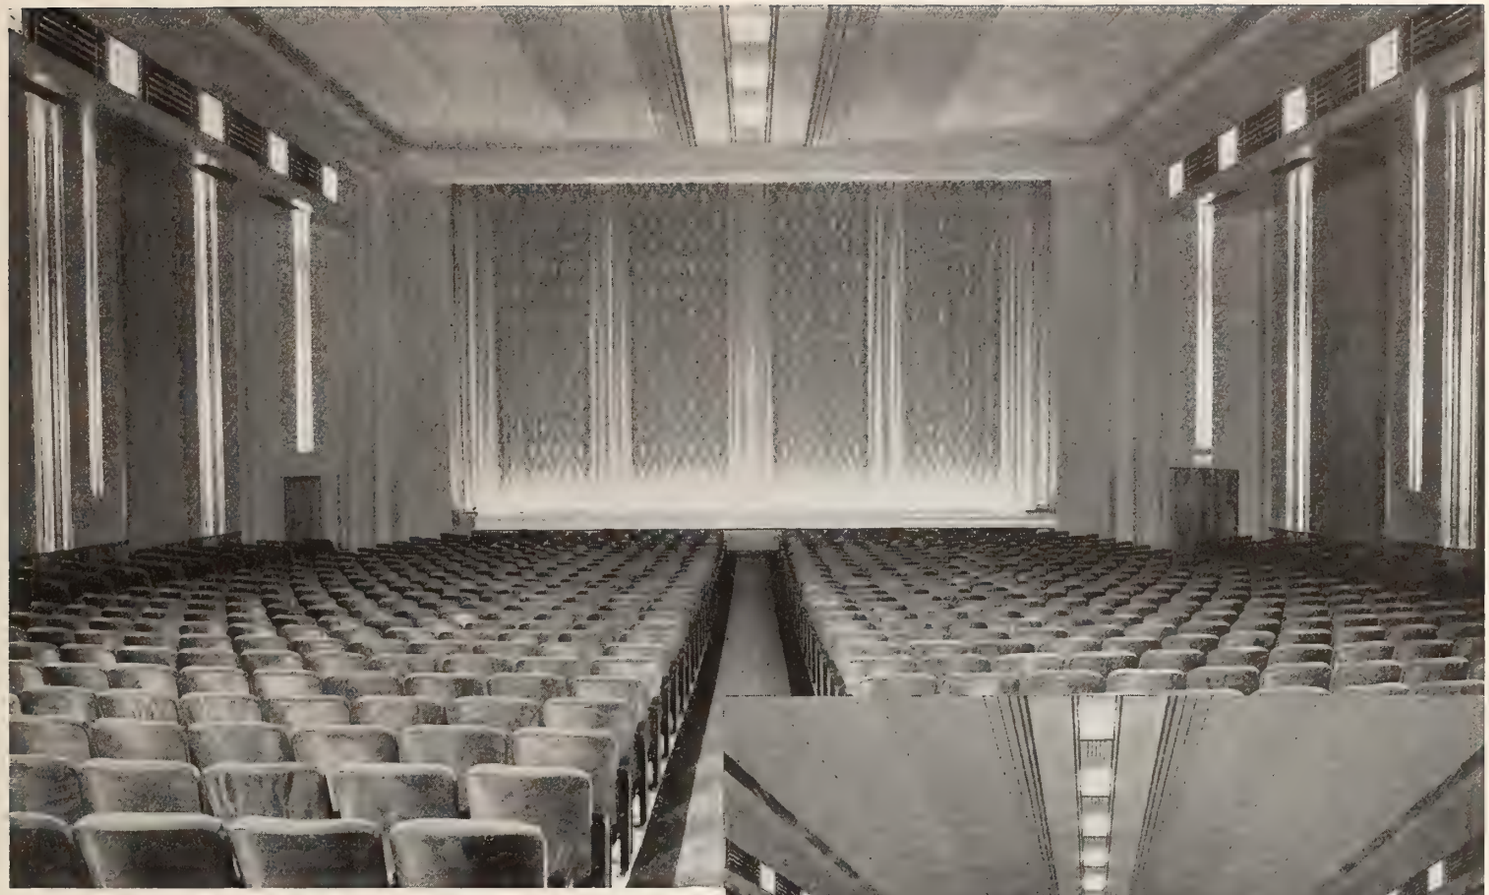
An Interior in Fabric and Solid Wood

• Describing the Ventnor theatre in Ventnor, N. J., in which silk and mahogany are combined with translucent marble, glass tiles and metals in a modern pattern. Specifications of this project appear on page 10.





Above: The front of the Ventnor, with its entranceway and built-in box office bordered by Lumar marble, a new slightly translucent material here laid over lamp boxes. Otherwise front construction is in limestone. The triangular marquee is illuminated with neon name signs, and silhouette-letter attraction boards three lines high.

Below: The lobby, looking toward a vestibule inside the entrance. This view is of the central portion of the lobby, which is T-shaped, extending across the rear of the auditorium. Walls and doors are of solid mahogany. On each side the wall is interrupted by a gun-metal mirror. The white strips at the cornices are lighting coves.

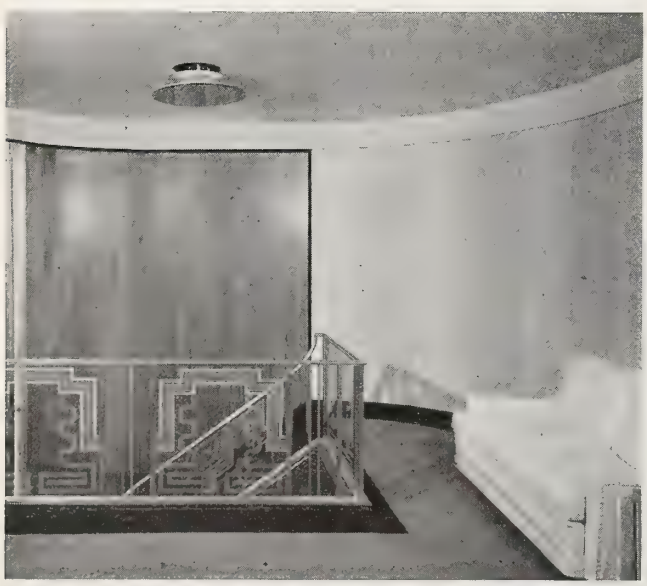
Above: Forward view of the auditorium showing walls divided into plaster pilasters and panels of silk. Along the walls are vertical silvered and fluted metal troughs containing Lumiline lamps, the light from which is reflected from blue-tinted plaster recesses. The curtain as it appears to the audience, matches the wall fabric.

Below: Looking into the auditorium from behind the standee rail, which really forms an inner wall of the lobby. The lower portion, above the baseboard, is of mahogany. Above the windowed section are Pyrex opaque tiles. Marking each aisle entrance are strips of illuminated Lumar translucent marble set in the mahogany dado.



Above: The auditorium looking toward the rear. Note carpet motif continuous with the central portion of the lobby, leading from entrance. The balcony-like structure across the rear merely conceals a light trough illuminating the upper rear wall, which is covered with silk fabric laid over rock wool. The overhanging cornices conceal air ducts, the side grilles of which alternate with light boxes covered with flashed glass. Ceiling illumination is of similar type.

End view of the right wing of the lobby-foyer, showing exit treatment similar to that used for fountain in the left wing. The stairs here lead to the men's lounge and projection room.

The women's lounge on a mezzanine level behind the auditorium and to the left of the projection room. The furniture, of special design, it covered in white kid leather. Carpet is jade green.

Another view of the women's lounge, showing how stairway opens directly into it. The stair rail is of bronze closed in with etched glass. In the stairway wall is a vertical reverse light trough.

MATERIALS AND EQUIPMENT

VENTNOR THEATRE, VENTNOR, N. J.

Owner: Wielland-Lewis Circuit. Architect: Armand Carroll.

Construction and Plan: The building housing the Ventnor theatre has a frontage of 75 feet and a depth of 133 feet. Construction is of concrete, brick and fireproof tile. The theatre entrance is 16 feet wide, located in the center, with stores on either side. Above the stores are apartments.

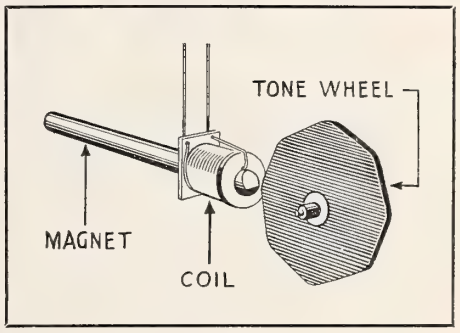
Front: Side pilasters and facing above marquee of limestone. Beneath marquee facing is in Lumar marble, a translucent material, behind which are lamp boxes. The box office is built in at the right side of the entrance doors abutting the sidewalk.

Lobby-Foyer: The walls, above a 10-inch dado, are of solid Mexican mahogany in natural finish, ⅝-inch thick. On either side this material is interrupted by banded gun-metal mirrors with bronze stripping, 7 feet high and 18 inches wide. At the cornice the mahogany wall treatment ends in a lighting cove of reversed type—light is reflected on the wall, not on the ceiling. The wood wall finish continues into each wing, and is used for staircases and lower portion of the standee rail. The upper part of the rail is of plate glass and Pyrex corrugated glass tiles. At each side of the aisle entrances is a narrow strip of Lumar marble set flush into the mahogany over a lamp box. At the outside wall adjoining the staircase to the women's lounge is a fountain alcove with a soffit of illuminated Lumar marble, while a similar treatment is employed at an exit on the outside wall of the opposite wing. The entire lobby-foyer is carpeted in Chenille (by Cochran Mills), unpatterned, rust color inside a black border, and this carpeting is continued into the aisles.

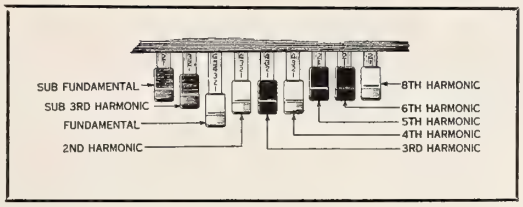
Auditorium: Walls are of plaster with broad panels of silk fabric (Kapok) in a special pattern of strawberry-red figures on an oyster-white ground. The fabric, which was pre-shrunk before laying, is stretched on battens over Johns-Manville rockwool. The same decorative and acoustical treatment is applied across the upper rear wall of the auditorium. At intervals along the side walls are vertical plaster recesses, tinted blue, reflecting light from metal troughs, painted aluminum. Each trough is 18 feet high and contains 18 lamps of 30 watts. Illumination is also provided by lamp boxes set into plastered structures concealing ventilating ducts (see Air-Conditioning below) and into a ceiling panel. These are decoratively covered with Corning flashed glass set flush. In the ventilating duct structures located along the side cornices, these light elements alternate with ornamental grilles. Ornamentation flanking the proscenium arch is in cast plaster. At the rear wall, above the standee rail, is a projecting structure imitative of a balcony but deep enough to contain only reflective light sources illuminating the rear wall above. This is of plaster except for a central panel of Acousti-Celotex. (Total amount of rockwool, 35,000 square feet.)

Seating: Chairs range from 20 to 22 inches wide, arranged in four banks with a center and two side aisles, each 4 feet wide, on a radial plan containing 28 rows. The chairs, by American Seating Company, are of full spring construction, with jade-green mohair backs and strawberry-colored leather seats. The capacity is 972.

Lounges: Both men's and women's lounges are entered directly from the stairs, the rooms surround two sides of the stair well, which is protected by a bronze railing. Off each is a toilet room, the walls of which are constructed of terra cotta bricks.



Projection: The projection room is 12 feet deep and 16 feet wide. Projectors are Simplex; sound is by a Western Electric system. The projection lamps are Brenkert Magnarc, supplied from a Hertner motor-generator. The projection angle is 4½°. The screen is 29½ x 21½ feet, masked to an image of 24½ x 17¾ feet.



Air-Conditioning: Conditioned air is supplied the entire theatre by a duct system. Air is introduced into the auditorium from grilles in the ducts along the side cornices of the auditorium, both at the sides and in the soffits. The lobby is supplied partly from the auditorium, through grilles in the standee rail, and by inlets of its own. Other ducts lead to the lounges. Cooling is by means of well water.

No Pipes—Yet Full-Range Pipe Organ Music

Illustrating principles of the all-electric organ. At top are the manuals with drawbars with which the many possible tones are created, as indicated in the diagram at left. Diagrammed above is the disc-magnet system by which the electrical energy is given its tonal frequencies. Pictured also is a power cabinet, but only half theatre size.

• How Laurens Hammond's invention operates, creating true pipe organ and all tones produced by theatre organs entirely by electricity—and its peculiar suitability to theatres

THEATRE OPERATORS entertaining the thought of installing an organ for musical solos or the accompaniment of stage interludes, would do well to consider the all-electric "pipe" organ invented by Laurens Hammond of Chicago and brought to technical perfection during the past year. It has the tones of a pipe organ. It has, however, no pipes. Tones are created by electrical impulses entirely, and amplified to any degree desired by amplification tubes actuating speakers. Compared with a pipe organ of comparable power and tone range, it is inexpensive and occupies much less space.

Many pipe organs have been removed from motion picture theatres since the film began to supply its own music and dialogue rules out musical accompaniment except during certain dramatic situations. Other organs, though not removed, have been allowed to deteriorate through the action of dirt and atmospheric changes and disuse. Probably few of them could be restored to good working condition for a sum of money representing less than a substantial portion of the original cost.

A performer at the console.

Organ music has not entirely disappeared from the screen theatre, of course. Indeed, in other countries, particularly England, it still occupies a respectable place on the programs of leading cinemas, while in the United States it has been continued without interruption, or resumed, in theatres having a clientele especially responsive to musical and "personal" elements which an organ can contribute to the show. In the main, however, the organ, at least in the United States, was eliminated by sound as something no longer needed, and it is practically in that same classification today. That is to say, although theatre management has been obviously groping during the past few years, for a something-extra and a something-different with which to reinforce the "draw" of the all-screen program, it has sought to find them in double features, prize games, raffles, bargain matinees and, in some cases, occasional stage acts (commonly exploiting a celebrity acquired from the theatre's would-be competitor, the radio). This apparent groping, and the fact that organ music has been added to the programs of a small number of theatres during the past year or so—Hammond electric organs, for example, have been installed in about a dozen houses—returns to the organ a potential significance it was thought to have definitely lost forever.

CREATION OF TONES

The all-electric pipeless "pipe" organ is itself a result of the discoveries in electrophonics which have given us radio and motion picture sound. It is played by a performer, and its two-manual console is comparable to that of an orthodox air-column pipe organ. However, no sound is created in the console, only electrical wave forms. There is no sound until electrical impulses energized in the console mechanism and relayed to the amplifiers have actuated speaker diaphragms.

The sound produced by the speakers is that of the conventional pipe organ, or is made up of those combinations of tones which may be produced by the more complex, expensive theatre pipe organs. Technically, 253 million tone variations are possible (only part of these, of course, are desirable), and out of this range may be

How to Determine the Validity Of Theatre Tax and License Laws

● Reviewing the body of law established in high court decisions, indicating when State or local levies may be successfully contested in court

By LEO T. PARKER

SINCE THE general laws on theatre taxation, licenses and regulations are similar in all States, it is not difficult to impart specific legal information applicable to all theatre owners alike. Therefore in this article are reviewed leading cases decided by the higher courts in different States, in order that theatre operators in various locations may determine with dependability the established law. In this manner theatre owners and operators may rightly judge and determine whether it is wise and advisable to file test suits against undesirable taxation, license laws and oppressive regulations.

First, it is important to know that the courts in all States recognize that municipalities may enact taxation laws against theatres under either the police power or the general taxing authority. In order that readers may thoroughly understand the relationship between police power and taxing authority of municipalities, it is well to explain that police power is that power naturally possessed by municipal officers to safeguard the morals, lives, health and property of the citizens. In other words, all municipalities have a natural authority to protect the lives and property of citizens.

However, taxing authority must originate from either the State constitution or State statutes. Therefore, an ordinance is void unless either the State's constitution or statutes authorize the particular form of taxation specified by a municipal ordinance.

Moreover, the courts hold that the license taxes must not be enacted and enforced if the same are prohibitive of a useful and legitimate business. This rule applies regardless of whether the license tax is levied under the police or the taxing authority. Therefore, under no circumstances may an ordinary theatre owner be required to pay a license so high that the average theatre owner is unable to pay such fee, in consideration of the profit derived from operation of the theatre business.

TAXING OUT NUISANCES

On the other hand, this rule must not be confused with the one that relates to certain kinds of businesses, such as those that are inherently harmful and dangerous to the public welfare, which may be taxed so high that the owners of these undesirable businesses will be discouraged, and even amount to a prohibition of the business whether in the classification of amusements or otherwise. However, since it is universally recognized that the operation of a theatre is not a nuisance or an undesirable business, this latter rule of the law rarely is applicable to theatre owners. Nevertheless, the rule is mentioned in order to inform readers correctly of all phases of the law. Obviously, a theatre may be, but generally is not, conducted so that the class of patronage, noise developed, disturbances resulting, moral influences, etc., are objectionable and demoralizing to the average citizen. [See 116 So. 369; 187 U. S. 609.]

Therefore, under all circumstances, theatre owners, when endeavoring to interpret the validity of a taxing law, must, and the courts will, bear in mind the distinction between useful businesses and that class of businesses which are productive of disorder, injurious to the public, or harmful to public morals. Not only may a municipality tax a business of the latter class unreasonably high, but it may prohibit conduction of such business under the police power delegated to it.

The following explanations of the law refer to higher court cases involving the validity of State statutes and city ordinances imposing a license tax or regulation on the ordinary and average theatre.

LEGISLATURE DELEGATES POWER

A TAXATION LAW usually originates specifically or impliedly from the State's constitution, therefore, the legislatures of all States may pass valid, reasonable and non-discriminatory laws which tax or regulate theatres; or the State legislature may expressly or impliedly delegate authority to municipalities to enact taxation laws. Without this delegated authority a municipality cannot pass a valid law taxing theatres.

After a State legislature delegates to a municipal corporation the power to levy license taxes, the municipal council may pass an ordinance licensing theatres, and places of amusement, providing the ordinance is reasonable, uniform and not discriminatory. This law has been upheld by many court decisions in different States.

[For variations of the law, see State cases, as follows: Arkansas: Waters v. Leech, 3 Arkansas 110; Colorado: Godfrey v. El Paso, 124 Pacific 190; Florida: Park v. Morgan, 60 Southern 347; Illinois: Webber v. Chicago, 148 Illinois 313; Massachusetts: Boston v. Schaffer, 9 Pick. 415; Minnesota: Higgins v. Lacroix, 137 N. W. 417; Mississippi: Orton v. Brown, 35 Mississippi 426; Missouri: Negrotto v. Monett, 49 Missouri App. 286; North Carolina: State v. Prevo, 101 S. E. 370; Ohio: Baker v. Cincinnati, 11 Ohio State 534; Pennsylvania: Mahanvy City, 40 Pennsylvania Superior Court 50; Rhode Island: Standard v. Cushing, 74 Atlantic 719; Tennessee: Hodges v. Nashville, 2 Humph. 61; Texas: Brunk v. State, 6 S. W. (2d) 353; Virginia: Robinson v. Norfolk, 61 S. E. 762.]

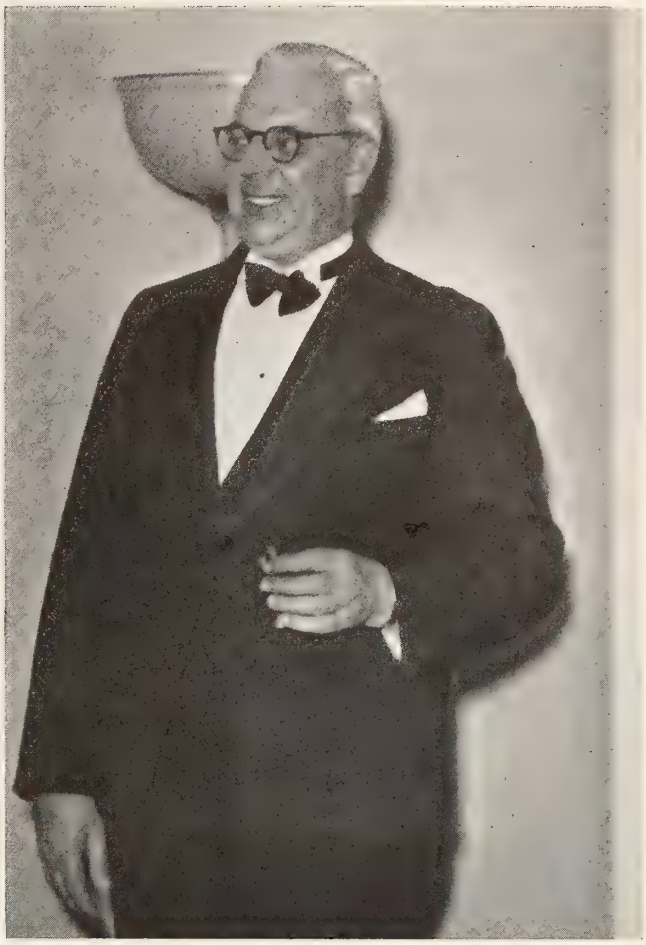
These various cases have established the law that a municipal ordinance licensing theatres is valid, provided such ordinance is authorized by a State law and the license fee is reasonable, uniform, and not discriminatory.

TAXATION UNDER POLICE POWER

WHERE A STATE constitution does not authorize a State legislature to pass licensing laws and other regulations, numerous courts have held that in the exercise of its police power a State may impose a license tax on shows and places of amusement, and such a statute is valid unless it is unreasonable, or discriminating. [144 S. E. 846; 260 S. W. 138.]

What is discriminating depends upon the decisions of prior higher courts. Generally speaking, a taxing law is not discriminating if it authorizes a lower rate of taxation, or exempts from taxation all the theatres in the same classification. For example, in Curdts v. South Carolina (127 S. E. 438, 273), it was disclosed that a State legislature passed a State law imposing a tax on all theatres excepting those located in unincorporated towns of less than 2,000 inhabitants. Also, theatres, the proceeds of which were donated to charitable or religious organizations, were exempt from taxation.

Suit was filed for the purpose of testing the validity of this law and it was held valid.



VALIDITY OF PENALTIES

Also, in Wallace v. New York, it was shown that a State law required each theatre owner to pay $500 annual license and imposed a fine of $100 for every perform-

We Exploited a Theatre-Going Idea

Explains STUART DOYLE

"I AM GOING to give England some showmanship—showmanship as we know it in Australia and in the States."

Stuart Boyle was referring to his current project in London's Piccadilly Circus, crossroad of Europe. "A smaller Radio City," he called it. And the writer was reminded of something Henry Craig wrote about this dynamic Australian in BETTER THEATRES six years ago.

"What more opportunities Doyle will find for his opportunities on this smallest of the continents," admitted Mr. Craig after reviewing the Doyle career up to that point, "one cannot predict. The growth of the motion picture theatre business in Australia to an importance and high standard comparable to those in the United States and England, has been more rapid than in even those countries, and today one hears it said that Australia's limitations are already exerting a check on expansion. But one wonders if Doyle has heard about them. And if he has, will they long remain limitations?"

They remained limitations—Australia's. But (to answer Mr. Craig) not Stuart Doyle's. The rapid theatre expansion of the last few years, which Mr. Doyle declares now to have arrived at the saturation point, definitely checked the building of the circuit operator on the island continent. But it merely turned Stuart Doyle into activities which have consolidated the position of his theatre interests, which have given Australia domestic film product—and which now are bringing to London "a smaller Radio City." It was all of these manifold motion picture interests which had brought him this summer from Sydney to New York. The head of Greater Union Theatres, Ltd., which is associated with Hoyt's Theatres in the domination of motion picture exhibition in the Antipodes; the head, too, of Australia's only (and increasingly important) motion picture production organization, Cinesound Productions, Ltd., Stuart Doyle is still a substantial distance this side of 50. He is of middle height, compact of build, speaks quietly, pursues yachting diligently.

• ONE OF A SERIES OF INTERVIEWS WITH • INTERESTING CINEMA FOLK

"Although I say that theatre building in Australia has arrived at the saturation point," he explained, "I believe that there is still a large part of the population remaining for exploitation. In running certain pictures—for example, 'A Midsummer Night's Dream'—we found in our theatres a large number of people who scarcely ever attended motion picture theatres, some of them had never done so before. In some localities we have made checks, and from the evidence, I believe that at least 50% of the population represents a virgin field for the motion picture industry. Has any attempt ever been made in the United States to find out if that might be true here?"

The writer could not recall any.

"Well, I think you'd be surprised. There are still a lot of people who do not go see motion pictures—a lot of people still to be sold this form of entertainment."

Stuart Doyle came into the motion picture business from the law. That was in 1914. It was of course along about that time that the erection of palatial theatres began in America. Stuart Doyle immediately studied the metropolitan situation in Australia. He began to build finer theatres, too, and to organize a circuit of them. He ultimately provided Sydney with the magnificent Capitol, seating 3,300 and located in the heart of a slum. Failure for it was predicted. It proved a huge success. Other theatres followed, in Sydney, in Melbourne, in Victoria. By 1930, Union Theatres was a circuit of 64 houses, most of them setting precedents in architecture, policy and showmanship. And now this new project, in London.

It will have two theatres. Nothing really comparable in size to New York's Radio City, Mr. Doyle explained, but in accommodations and policy a true amusement center, built to inspire London's own, and to dazzle the capital's visitors.

He was talking about it in his suite at the Waldorf-Astoria. He got out the plans. Just off Piccadilly Circus the structure will lie, occupying a city square. The main section will contain a 1,500-seat theatre devoted to screen productions on extended runs. Beneath it will be a 300-seat newsreel theatre. In another part of the sublevel will be a huge and very grand restaurant. On the street, adjoining the larger theatre, will be shops. And television is a part of the scheme of the newsreel cinema.

"It will take showmanship to put it over," reflected Mr. Doyle, "but we can do it with the Australian and American kind. London has never had that kind. But we are going to sell these theatres from the moment excavation begins and will keep England conscious of them as something that must be seen.

"We'll do what we have done with great success in Australia. You know, over there we run the bigger pictures three, four, six months." He named several productions currently enjoying their usual week-runs at the key theatres of the United States. He prophesied runs of many months for each of them in Sydney and other Australian cities at from $1.50 to $2 per ducat!

"Oh, yes, we get those prices for long-run pictures regularly. You see, we haven't merely sold pictures to our public. We have sold the idea of coming into the city, to shop and in general get a change from suburban and small town atmosphere, and at the same time to visit our great theatres. We have sold the motion picture theatre and an idea—the related idea

How Any Manager Can Test The Condition of a Heating Plant

● Be prepared when the cold snap comes—inspect your heating system now. Here is detailed the procedure for getting the information you need

WITH THE temperatures where I am, soaring around 100° F., and the wet bulb in the high eighties, it is hard to concentrate on the many heating problems that we are all going to face during the next winter. However, unless we keep a jump ahead of this perpetual maintenance problem it will certainly overtake us and pass us by.

Heating costs are substantial, but they pale into almost insignificance when we compare them with our film charges, advertising costs or even our electric light and power bills if we are fortunate enough to have refrigeration. Inefficient heating systems actually cause inconvenience from a practical operating point of view rather than from a financial viewpoint, and we never know just how many people stay away from the theatre because it is too cold. Consequently it becomes a very real problem to heat a theatre both properly and economically.

To start our program of more efficient heating this winter first calls for an inspection. Naturally the more competent the individual making this inspection, the more benefits to be derived. The fact that you have never really made an inspection of a heating plant need not overawe you. Common sense combined with a willingness to get dirty, and the perseverence to make yourself understand, will make up for any lack of professional or engineering knowledge. It is not absolutely necessary that you cover the whole plant in one day—just get started and keep at it until you have covered the entire system.

HOW SYSTEM WORKS

We all know that steam is created or generated or made by boiling water. To boil water requires heat and to obtain heat something must be burned; i.e., coal, wood, rags, paper, gas, oil, etc. Most of us know, and those who don't will find out now, that it requires oxygen to make things burn. An inexhaustible supply of oxygen is at our disposal, contained in the free air that is about us.

Now in order that the process of burning something, or combustion, may heat water, the water must be brought into close proximity to the burning substance. When the steam from the water is created by the heat, if not enclosed it would escape into the air and be lost, hence we confine it in a boiler and a system of pipes and radiators. When the steam is generated, we must guide it through pipes to the points where we want to make use of it. These pipes should be free from obstruction and provide as easy a passage for the steam as possible.

When we get the steam to the point where we want to use it we must provide some equipment for regaining from the steam the heat which the burning fuel imparted to it. This piece of equipment we call a radiator. It takes heat to transform water to steam and the same amount of heat is given up when steam is converted back (condenses) to water. The heat applied or transferred to water to make steam is called the heat of vaporization. The heat given up when steam is condensed into water might be called the heat of condensation. Heat of vaporization equals heat of condensation. When the steam has returned to the form of water we don't want to throw it away or waste it, so we provide space in pipes or an entirely separate piping system to convey the water of condensation back to the boiler.

This, in the simplest words at my command, is the whole principle of a heating system. Understanding this basic idea, it is easy to see that all of the accessories, traps, valves, pumps, etc., are designed to aid one or more of the operations and make the whole system more efficient.

INSPECTION PROCEDURE

START THE inspection equipped with a good flash light, a pad of paper and a pencil to make notes.

1. GRATE BARS

Open all the fire-doors, ash pit-doors, clean-out doors and all access-doors to the boiler. Examine the grate bars. Certainly anyone can tell the general design of the grate bars and can see whether they are warped or have lugs burned or broken off, or the bar broken entirely. Operate the shaker bar and satisfy yourself that the grates move properly. The function of the grate is to support the bed of hot coals up off the floor so that air can circulate under and through the bed of coals. They are supposed to hold the hot coals until they are burned, then as they become ash, to permit it to drop through into the ash pit.

It is a natural conclusion that the size of the openings in the grate determines the size of the fuel that can be best burned on that grate. If the openings in the grate are too large and the coal too small, then the coal will fall through the gate into the ash pit before it is properly burned. If the spaces in the grate are too small and the coal too large, then the coal can't get enough air through the grate to burn properly, and you will have a hard time getting a hot enough fire to create the quantity of steam required. So the size of the fuel in relation to the grate design is of importance.

2. INSIDE BOILER

Now examine the surfaces on the inside of the boiler that separate the fire from the water. Most naturally a thin piece of steel plate will transmit heat more quickly than a thick piece will. So if there has been any incrustation of scale, soot or rust on those surfaces, it will take longer for the water to heat up. All those surfaces should be cleaned very thoroughly. If you will carefully examine your boiler, you will PROTECT VENTILATING EQUIPMENT: When the summer season comes to a close, that is the time to clean thoroughly and paint up your ventilating equipment. Don't just leave it to rust and corrode during the winter months, then because the job in the springtime is a hard, dirty one, just not do it.

The fans should be scraped and cleaned with a wire brush, and the housings and supports painted with the best grade of aluminum metal paint, having at least 3½ pounds of the powder mixed into one gallon of the vehicle. A gallon of this paint will cover 450 to 550 square feet. Don't buy ready-mixed aluminum paint. The fan rotor, shaft and blades, should be cleaned carefully even to washing with gasoline to remove the accumulation of dirt, and these painted with the same aluminum paint.

Wash out the bearings, oil well or grease caps with gasoline, and lubricate thoroughly with fresh clean oil or grease. Paint the bearing housings a nice shiny black. Be sure that no paint gets into the bearings or into the oiling system.

Clean up the motor, and paint it if you wish, but don't paint over the name plate. Wash out the bearings and refill the oil wells with clean oil. Then get a large piece of clean cloth and tie it over the motor to keep out the dust during the months when it is idle.

Slacken the belts—not too much, but just enough to equalize the strain on them. Clean out the starter switch and fuse box, and be sure that the covers to these boxes are snapped shut.

BUILDING INSULATION: With winter coming on I want to call your attention again to the benefits from the standpoint of comfort and secondary savings resulting from the installation of building insulation. Actual installations have left no room for doubt as to its real value in theatre operation. It won't cost a dime to have your theatre surveyed for insulation, and calculation made indicating just what insulation can do for you.

Really the basic load on any heating plant, after the building has once been brought up to occupancy temperature, say 72°, is just to replace the heat losses from the building. In installing insulation the theatre can be brought up to 72° with less firing hours of the boiler, and the temperature can be maintained with greater facility because the heat losses are reduced from 30% to 35%, consequently the rate of heat loss has been reduced. It is that rate of heat loss that build up the load on the boiler.

For instance, the rate of heat loss on a winter afternoon is lower than the rate of heat loss at 8:30 o'clock in the evening, consequently we have to tax the boiler to capacity in the evening and can let it almost idle in the afternoon. Insulation will reduce the rate of heat loss as well as it reduces the total quantity of heat lost. The subject of insulation has been previously covered.

Glass has become an architectural, structural material. Today, because of its newness and color effects, it is extremely theatrical. It is not inexpensive, but it is easy to maintain and looks distinctive and rich. Glass is now even used for floors, roofs and walls, in addition to being applied to walls as wainscoting and decoration. Hollow glass units are now available for walls, and vacuum units are now available for use in walls for insulation against heat, cold or noise.

Structural glass is manufactured from feldspar, clay, sand and manganese, vitrified with intense heat and rolled into slabs of varying thicknesses. It has great possibilities for theatrical purposes, and is entirely practicable from the point of view of maintenance.

find that the flame from the fire and the very hot gases resulting from the burning of the fuel are guided back and forth and around in between hollow sections of metal that contain the boiler water. This is done for the purpose of transferring to the water every bit of heat possible from the combustion or burning of the fuel. Consequently all of those surfaces should be free from soot and scale. You will find access doors provided so that these surfaces can be thoroughly cleaned.

(Now, let's be honest: Is there anything up to this point that an intelligent theatre manager can't do because he's not an engineer?)

3. BREECHING

The flue gases, smoke and excess air that has passed through the bed of coals, firebox and flues, finally leaves the boiler through a sheet metal or brick pipe that connects to the stack (smoke stack); this connection from the boiler to the stack is called the breeching. The breeching connection is usually very nearly horizontal and varies in length from a few feet to 8 or 10 yards. Because of the tendency of the flue gases to slow down in the breeching, the gases deposit much soot and fine ash which because of their velocity they had carried along from the firebox. Most naturally the breeching should be cleaned out. There usually is and always should be an access door for this purpose.

4. INSULATION

A boiler filled with hot water and generating steam will radiate to the air of the boiler room a great quantity of heat. Such heat is wasted because we don't need heat in the boiler room, and we don't operate the boiler for that purpose. This heat loss can be minimized by applying to the outside of the boiler asbestos plaster from 2 to 3 inches thick. This plaster should always be applied on wire reinforcement. If your boiler is not covered, then take steps to have it covered. If the covering now on is cracked or falling off, have it repaired.

5. FUSIBLE PLUG

Further examination of the boiler will reveal several things—first, a fusible plug. The exact location of the fusible plug is dependent upon the make and model of the boiler. The duty to be performed by this plug is (what the name implies) to melt at a pre-determined temperature and release all of the water from the boiler. Depending upon the exact composition of the fusible alloy of the plug, the degree of temperature at which it will melt is pre-determined. Fusible plugs may be obtained with ratings over a rather narrow range of melting temperatures. In many states the law requires that fusible plugs be renewed every year, also many boiler insurance companies insist upon this requirement.

6. SAFETY VALVE

The next adjunct of the boiler to note is the safety valve. This is usually located on top of the boiler. Have the safety valve removed, taken apart, cleaned and reassembled. See that it is set at 15 pounds and re-installed in the boiler. The safety valve is designed to release the pressure of steam from within the boiler should it any time exceed 15 pounds pressure per square inch.

8. WATER TEST

It is purely a mechanical design and anyone is capable of understanding its principle if he will take the time to examine it.

7. PRESSURE GAUGE

Now turn your attention to the pressure gauge. Don't try to dismantle the pressure gauge and make any adjustments. If the glass is broken, that of course can be replaced locally. Pressure guages for low-pressure boilers cost only about five dollars and every theatre can afford to have two. They should be installed on a small T-pipe connection with a small valve between each valve and the boiler, so that only one gauge need be under pressure of the boiler during actual operation of the boiler. Therefore, at this point, if your boiler has only one gauge, buy another and install it as suggested, then you will have some reasonable means of checking the correctness of the old gauge. If one gauge is found to register incorrectly it should be discarded and replaced or sent back to the factory for repair.

For the moment let's assume that all connections to the boiler are tight. Somewhere along the top of the boiler you will notice a large pipe that has several connections into the main water or steam compartment of the boiler. This pipe is often referred to as the steam riser header. From this header various steam rises take off, and these steam risers serve the various portions of the theatre. Each riser taking off from the header should have a valve in it somewhere close to the main steam header. If one or more risers have no valve in them, you certainly should have valves installed. Depending upon the size of the risers, the installation of these shut-off valves are costly or inexpensive.

Every low-pressure boiler is required to stand a 15-pound per square inch internal pressure. Pressures in excess of that will be released by operation of the safety valve. Now we want to put a 15-pound pressure test on the boiler to determine leaks and whether the boiler is safe for operation at pressures less than 15 pounds. This test is made with water pressure. Close all the steam riser valves, also close the valves on the condensation returns to the boiler. Then go to the city water line that feeds the boiler, watch your gauges carefully, turn on the feed water valve and let the boiler fill. As the pressure increases, as indicated on the gauges, note whether the two gauges register exactly alike. As the gauges approach a reading of 15 pounds, begin to close down on the water valve and at just a fraction of a pound under 15 pounds, shut the water valve tight.

Now the boiler, we will say, is under 14¾ pounds pressure. It should hold that pressure indefinitely. Watch the gauges: if that indicator on the gauges shows any lessening of pressure, it means that the boiler is leaking or that one of the valves in the steam risers is leaking and letting water into the risers; or that one of the valves in the condensation-returns is leaking and permitting water to back up into those return lines. Perhaps one or two of the valves are leaking around the stem packing—this, of course, can be seen with your eyes.

Examine the boiler inside and out for leaks. If the boiler has an asbestos covering, it may be some time before a leak is evident on the outside, therefore don't rush this part of the inspection.

Now let's assume that the boiler is tight and that the pressure is slowly declining. Externally the valves look all right, so the conclusion is reached that one of the valves, either in the risers or the returns, is not seating properly and is leaking. This condition can frequently be detected by the ear. A good way to listen to what's going on inside the valves is by use of a stick. Take a piece of wood, say ½-inch square by 2 feet long, place one end of it solidly against the valve and the other end solidly against the head in the vicinity of the ear. By comparison of what you hear at one valve with what is heard at another valve you will generally be able to determine the leaking valve. Leaking valves on steam risers to unoccupied spaces will add materially to fuel bills each year.

Now that every thing is tight, or at least that we have definite knowledge as to locations of leaks, let us complete the pressure test. Remember the safety valve is set for 15 pounds. Go to the feed water valve, and still watching the gauges, crack the valve slowly so that the pressure in the boiler builds up to 15 pounds pressure. Both gauges should read exactly the same and at the moment they record 15 pounds, the safety valve should let go. At this moment you will get a shower of water, and, of course, you then shut the feed water inlet valve that you have been operating. If the gauges should register 15 pounds and the safety valve not release, then, of course, the thing to do is to release some of the pressure and examine, adjust or replace the safety valve so that it will operate at 15 pounds pressure.

9. AUTOMATIC FEED

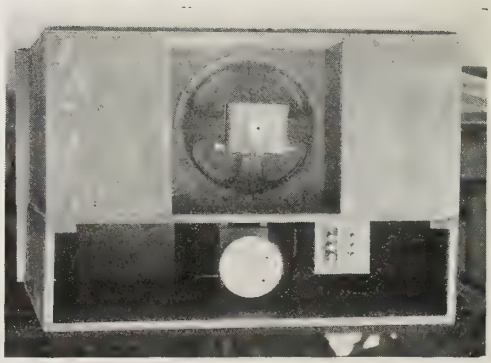
After carefully conducting this water test, a manager should know a good deal about his boiler. There are one or two other pieces of equipment that might be found connected to the boiler. If the boiler is not already equipped with an automatic boiler water feed, it certainly should be. An automatic water feed can be connected to the average theatre boiler for about $35, and it is fine insurance against cracked sections and the resulting shut-down and inconvenience. No matter whether or not your boiler is insured, the inconvenience and possible box office loss generally means that we are the loser whether or not we collect for the physical damage to the boiler.

10. WATER SIGHT

The water level line in the boiler is important. This is indicated by the water sight glass usually installed on the right hand side of the boiler. Somewhere on the metal portion of the boiler the manufacturer has indicated in raised letters on the casting the proper water level for that particular boiler. If this has been covered up with the asbestos covering, remove enough to determine where it is, then when the covering has been replaced, paint a conspicuous line on the covering that shows the proper water level in the boiler. Depending upon the design of the boiler and the system it serves, as little as an inch and a half difference in water level will be the difference between good and bad results.

It is because of the importance of water level that the automatic water feed proves its worth. The usual type of boiler water feed mechanism is just a float valve, similar in principle to the float valve found in any toilet flush tank, but, of course, it is more carefully manufactured and more sure of operation. The adjustments are such that it operates accurately within narrower differences of water level. Automatic water feeds should be taken apart at least once each year for cleaning.

Previously in BETTER THEATRES we have explained in detail how to clean the sight glass indicating the water level. That method is still good. Naturally, there's no use in having a water sight glass if it is so dirty, but one can't detect the height of water in it. Also we have previously explained a method of cleaning the inside (water side) surfaces of the boiler. It is quite evident that any accumulation of scale, corrosion or sediment inside the boiler will materially reduce its efficiency.



I still insist that a theatre manager need have had no technical or mechanical training in order to conduct a test and inspection as outlined. I shall continue this discussion in the Sept. 19th issue.—J. T. K.

Monitor Horn Designed On the Shearer Principle

MONITOR SPEAKER equipment incorporating some of the principles of horn design applied in the Shearer "two-way" system recently introduced, has been developed by Lansing Manufacturing Company of Los Angeles for direct program monitoring and public address systems.

The monitor is 50 inches wide by 27 inches high by 27 inches deep, and is designed to give a performance closely following the general characteristics of the theatre system so far as size permits.

Like the Lansing-Shearer theatre speaker system, the new "Monitor" is equipped with a high- and a low-frequency unit, also of Lansing make, together with suitable horns and dividing network. Standard equipment includes moving coil type unit for frequencies from 500 to 8,000 c.p.s., and a 15-inch dynamic cone-type speaker, delivering from 40 to 500 c.p.s., or a larger unit may be substituted.

Air Circulator With Dual Wave Type Propeller

EFFECTIVE air motion in large rooms, like the auditoriums and lobbies of theatres, through the use of entirely portable circulating fans, has been sought in the design of the Roto-Beam circulator installed in a number of theatres this summer. It is a blade-propeller type capable of operating at three speeds.

There are three sizes, but only the two larger sizes would be ordinarily suited to theatre work—that with a blade of 20 inches in diameter, and that with a 24-inch blade. Except when it is desired to "flush" out the theatre before the first performance, operation of the fans at middle speed is preferable, at which the noise level is low enough to prevent interference with the dialogue and music of the performance.

At middle speed, the 24-inch propeller moves 7,500 cubic feet of air per minute at a rate of 15 miles per hour (at point of emanation). The 20-inch propeller, at mid-speed, moves 8,500 cubic feet of air per minute at a rate of 19 miles per hour (a higher r.p.m. rating accounts for these figures being larger than those for the 24-inch fan, and of course there thus is a higher noise level for the 20-inch fan).

These fans are heavily constructed and are operated from a heavy stand that stands 9 feet above the floor, or from heavy brackets that can be secured to the wall.

The design of the Roto-Beam propeller is really the distinguishing feature of this fan. On examination it seems to be, in its form, more on the order of a ship propeller than an aeroplane propeller. The result of the unusual design is that from the center of the fan a spiraling beam of air at high velocity is projected, and this central beam is surrounded by a spiraling tube of air at lower velocity. This phenomena accounts for the remarkable aspirating and entraining effect of the Roto-Beam air shaft and its tremendous throw.

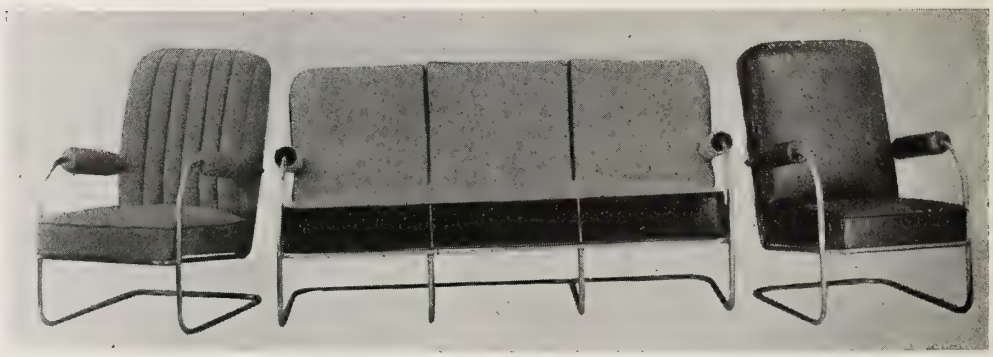
Air motion is one of three important requirements of air conditioning. The Roto-Beam air circulator produces effective and efficient air motion when so placed that the beam is directed above the heads of the occupants of an auditorium, and it definitely has a place in theatre lobbies, foyers, both summer and winter. Careful study as to proper locations for this equipment is essential for satisfactory results.—J. T. K.

All Operating Parts Sealed In New Refrigeration Machine

HERMETICALLY SEALED air-conditioning condensing units with nominal ratings from 7 to 22 tons cooling capacity, just brought out by the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company (Mansfield, Ohio), have the motor completely enclosed with the compressor, eliminating the shaft seal, for the purpose of preventing dust, dirt and moisture from reaching working parts. The rotor of the driving motor is overhung from the main rear compressor bearing on a short stubby extension of the compressor crankshaft. This gives an ultra-compact direct drive, makes oiling the motor unnecessary, and eliminates use of belts and pulleys.



The motor is water-cooled, making the unit suitable for installation in unventilated locations.

The direct drive motor and compressor are mounted on a common crankshaft to eliminate "lining up" problems and power losses incident to pulley and belt drive. Water-cooling of the motor permits installation in enclosed spaces. Previous designs of condensing units have provided water cooling for condenser and compressor but not for the motor. These new units employ a water jacket around the motor, within the motor housing, through which water circulates constantly. Oil going through the system comes into contact also with this cooled jacket, is itself cooled, and serves also to cool the entire operating mechanism. There is only one external pipe, reducing the possibility of leaks and simplifying field installation, since fewer connections are required.

The unit uses a simple oil pump forcing complete distribution of the oil to every part of the unit. Pump is directly driven from the main crankshaft by means of a noiseless Micarta gear. The pump consists only of two rotating gears, which pump the oil from the reservoir, strain it through a fine mesh metal screen and deliver it through rifle-drilled passages in crankshaft and connecting rods to all bearing surfaces. Oil pumped with the refrigerant is removed from the refrigerant by a simple oil separator, with no moving parts, is strained and returns for recirculation.

A series parallel condenser manifold permits use with either city water or cooling tower. A simple manifold allows the selection of pressure drop through the condenser, by placing two sets of coils in either series or parallel, to best suit local conditions. A pilot operated water valve is used for reliable control.

The mechanical adjustments are made through side service plates. The entire operating mechanism can be exposed by removing the side plates from the crankcase casting. No refrigerant or water lines need to be disconnected to service the interior of the unit. The unit itself is not disturbed in any way. Bolts holding the plates in position are removed and tightly screwed up again when adjustments have been made. The oil pump is also accessible. All major parts are interchangeable.

Recent designs in modern metal furniture suitable to theatres. These models, from the line of the Electric Welding Company of McKees Rock, Pa., are adapted to lounges and foyers. Any of them are obtainable in either enamel or cadmium frame finishes, or in stainless steel construction. There are no screws or bolts, all joints being welded; while construction is of solid, not tubular, metal. Fabrics cover a wide range of texture, weave, pattern and color, while either Pyroxylin coated fabric or genuine leather are also available for coverings. Both of the chairs illustrated have padded backs and seats. The divan is of deep-upholstered lounge type of a width to accommodate three people.

Projector Base With Moving Parts Reduced

A NEW HEAVY projector base, developed by Edward H. Wolk of Chicago, features in its design very few moving parts. All wiring is fully enclosed and comes through the floor to a distributing panel, from which it is fanned out to the various locations, with double-plugging receptacles in the front of the base to the foot switch on the bottom of the base, and to the lamphouses through large federal receptacles on the back of the base.

This base is heavy, and the table casting is mounted directly to it. The base carries an adjustable lamphouse carriage, that can be readily moved from side to side. The base accommodates a 16-inch or 18-inch magazine with room to spare at any angle.

Factors in Newsreel Theatre Air-Conditioning

CHIEFLY BECAUSE of rapid audience turnover, newsreel theatres present special problems in air-conditioning, and of special interest, therefore, are the operating data now available on the first summer season of the Newsreel theatre in Newark, New Jersey. Sixteen showings are made daily, from 8 a.m. until midnight. This audience turnover necessitates air conditions that will not produce shock to the bodily temperature of patrons on entering, yet provide the desired comfort while the show is being viewed.

During a recent hot spell when the outside thermometer, during the daytime, read from 90° to 96°, the theatre temperature ranged from 72° to 79°. This differential between outdoors and indoors offered a cooling effect found to be adapted to one coming in from the hot street. At those temperatures the relative humidity was maintained around 50%. While the cleaning of the air is not so apparent in the reduction of temperature, the air in the Newark Newsreel theatre is kept free from dust, smoke and odors by recirculation after passing through filters.

The Newsreel theatre installation, which is by Carrier, is typical of the layout for this type of theatre. The seating capacity is 400, with an auditorium that is long and narrow in shape. F. C. Wood, general manager, comments:

"Of course the comfort of the patrons was our primary consideration, but we were also seeking a fully automatic installation that would not require the time of an engineer for operation. The construction of our building necessitated the installation of the air conditioning equipment under the auditorium floor. Without any special sound insulation, no noise is transmitted to the theatre.

"We gave particular attention to the problem of ventilation and cooling between seasons; that is, between spring and summer, and between summer and fall. At these periods, the outside temperature may go below 70°, yet the body heat of the patrons will raise the temperature of the theatre to an uncomfortable degree. The calendar is, therefore, not a criterion.

"On the other hand, the fall and spring periods have their balmy days when the temperature inside will rise unless sufficient outside air is introduced to drop it. By dampering the outside air, the cooler air is admitted to the theatre as fast as the temperature rises inside the theatre. When the temperature of the air from the outside goes above 65°, the cooling equipment automatically starts to operate."

Lead Anchorage Used in New Type Of Expansion Bolt

AN EXPANSION bolt for securing theatre chairs and stationary equipment to floors, developed by the Chicago Expansion Bolt Company, combines lead and steel jackets and employs lead, a dead metal, for anchorage, a method calculated to eliminate any transmission of vibration to or cracking of masonry.

When placed in a hole and driven down with the application tool, the steel cone expands over the head of the bolt and completely fills all space between the head of bolt and wall of hole, thus preventing the lead from flowing past the head of bolt, and it wedges the bolt head in the hole. The lead jacket expands and flows over the steel cone completely filling the hole around the shank of the bolt and gives a soft but powerful grip between the bolt and masonry throughout the entire length of the lead jacket.

A washer, which is slightly larger than the lead jacket, is furnished, to give a good bearing for driving and expanding the lead jacket, and making the lead contact the masonry 100%. This washer also prevents the lead from "backing up" into setting tool, allowing the tool to be easily removed when bolt is driven.

produced all of the orchestral effects, in addition to those strictly associated with pipe organs, of which the largest theatre organs are capable. Yet, unlike the pipe or reed organ, which must have sets of pipes and reeds for every basic tone characteristic produced, Mr. Hammond's invention incorporates the full range of organ tones and instrument simulation without additional elements. This is because tones are produced electrically, instead of by air motion through a column. Tones are built by construction of subtones and overtones upon the fundamental through mixture of electrical frequencies. The organist can work out almost any tone quality suggested by the music or the acoustical conditions of the theatre and preset it for instant use by the mere tapping of a key during rendition. He is not dependent upon preset tones, however, if he is expert in his technique. He then can create, mix, modify and "color" the tones of either manual, or of the base, at any point during rendition, directly, by means of tonal controls just above the manuals (see accompanying photographs and diagrams).

The tonal controls are drawbars, of which there are four sets, each affecting certain keys of the manuals. There is also a set for the base keys. When the performer pulls out a drawbar and depresses a playing key, a slight alternating current is generated in the console. This current is carried through a cable to the power cabinet, where it is amplified by the vacuum tubes and transmitted to the speakers. By adjusting other drawbars for the keys he wants affected, the performer adds currents of other values to the original and thus varies the tonal effects of the keys depressed.

FREQUENCY CONTROL

The electrical energy actuated by the keys is supplied by a generator located in the console. A metallic disc about the size of a silver dollar is arranged so that it will rotate in close proximity to a permanent magent. Around the magnet is wound a coil (see diagram). The disc has a number of high spots, and as it rotates these high spots pass close to the magnet, varying the magnetic field and thus inducing a flow of current in the coil having a certain frequency characteristic. All tones have a certain frequency characteristic, and should the disc be rotated at a speed so that 440 high spots should pass the magnet in a second, the current generated would have a frequency of 440, and actuating a speaker diaphragm at that cycle, would produce the musical tone known in music (International Pitch) as "A."

There are 91 discs, driven by a constant speed synchronous motor, their speeds of

Good Housekeeping Makes Good Theatres

Patrons flock to theatres that are clean and comfortable. Spencer Vacuum Cleaning is the fast, modern and most efficient method of cleaning. It has at least a dozen advantages that apply particularly to theatres:

The theatre is kept cleaner—the time required is less.

Rugs look like new—have longer life.

Projection rooms and dressing rooms, the scenery and the stage, require minutes instead of hours for cleaning.

Also, the Spencer System removes all the foul air that has settled to the floors, as well as the finest dust.

By keeping the dust out, you can save on redecorating costs over a period of years.

Keep your theatre like new—every day, the Spencer Way. Booklets on theatre cleaning on request.

rotation and the number of high spots on each so calculated that each disc produces one of the 91 frequencies necessary for the 91 pitches required for fundamental tones and harmonics (it is the harmonics, of course, which give specific character to the tones of instruments, and also—though harmonic may not always be the right word in this application—which give identity to the human voice; the harmonics superimposed upon the fundamental represent the principle reason for the extension of the frequency range in theatre sound).

When a key of the manual is depressed, it selects the proper frequency for the fundamental of the note it represents, together with the proper frequencies for any or all of eight harmonics of that note as set upon the harmonic controller (set up during rendition, or preset and actuated by the preset key). Current of each of the frequencies thus determined flows through the contacts made by the key and to its corresponding drawbar. There its intensity is fixed by the extent to which the performer has drawn out the drawbar. Intensity plays a part in the formation of the ultimate quality of the tone, and each drawbar has eight intensity positions. With their respective intensities fixed, all of these currents representing the harmonics, together with the current representing the fundamental, are superimposed upon each other, or mixed, and flow as a single complex electrical wave to a preamplifier, which is also located in the console. Amplified to a small degree, this complex electrical current flows to the amplifiers and thence to the speakers.

VOLUME

Maximum volume is determined by the number of power units (cabinet with four amplifiers and four speakers), but volume is of course varied, for musical effect, by the performer. This is by means of a "swell pedal," which is located between the preamplifier and the power cabinet. This pedal varies the strength of the electrical energy received by amplifiers, and hence determines the strength of the impulse received by the speakers. Three power cabinets are adjudged sufficient for a theatre seating 800. Two of the four speakers in each cabinet cover a little more than the lower half of the frequency band, and the others cover a little more than the upper half. The power units are very small and may be placed most anywhere without being conspicuous. In most theatres, however, it is likely that positions beside the stage (in existing organ chambers, for example), and fairly high up, would prove most effective. The console is readily adapted to the smallest of areas in front of stages, it being only 4 feet square and, when open, about 40 inches high.

Current consumption for each amplifier is 180 watts. Maintenance is not comparable to that of a theatre pipe organ because there are no pipes to deteriorate because of atmospheric conditions and dirt. Such all-electric organs are also readily removable, requiring no special construction and in no way being legal fixtures.

In theatres where, at certain performances, there are many patrons waiting in the foyer or lobby, entertainment could be provided for them through a power cabinet located in this area, with the performer at the console in the auditorium and the auditorium power units, if desired, switched off.—*G. A New Medium Power Theatre Amplifier

A NEW SOUND-ON-FILM amplifier for extended frequency reproduction, with electronic equalizer to give high-frequency response up to 10,000 cycles, and to compensate for acoustic conditions or defects in recording, has been brought out by the Wholesale Radio Service Company of New York. The new amplifier, coded as Model 410-A, is designed for audiences up to 1000. Power output is 15 watts to a 500-ohm speaker line (peak output 25 watts). Beam power tubes, 6L6, are used in the output stage, resulting in a unit that is light and compact in proportion to the sound power delivered.

Weighing 33 pounds, the amplifier includes all features necessary for a complete sound system, less sound heads and loud speakers. It is a complete power supply unit as well as amplifier, providing photo-electric cell bias, exciter lamp current, and loudspeaker field excitation.

Photo-cell voltage is supplied to two cells, through a triple-tap connection that permits compensation for line voltage conditions or for inequality in the condition of the two cells.

Exciter lamp supply is designed for either 8.5 or 10-volt lamps, and is wired through a two-position switch on the front panel of the amplifier, by means of which sound changeover between projectors is effected by switching the exciter lamp current.

D.C. exciter lamp supply can be substituted at additional cost for response at the lower frequencies.

Loudspeaker field supply as furnished by the amplifier can be adapted to varying loudspeaker arrangements, and is adequate for the two matched 8-inch dynamic speakers included with this amplifier in some systems.

Input circuits provide for two photo-cell connections, at a gain of 128 decibels from each. A microphone jack is included, which may be used for announcing or for stage show reinforcement, or for incidental music played on any standard electrical phonograph. The gain from this input circuit is 115 db., at an input impedance of 150,000 ohms. Tubes used are two 6J7's, one 6N7, two 6L6's, and one 83V rectifier.

The equalizer incorporates an exclusive use of a vacuum tube to provide frequency control, selectivity being provided by variation of the plate load of a voltage amplifier tube. A range of 12 decibles in the response at 10,000 cycles is afforded by varying the setting of the equalizer.

Choice of eleven output impedances is provided, to match any loudspeaker system. The amplifier is obtainable with output characteristics of .35, .6, 1.35, 2, 4, 6, 8, 15, 50, 250 or 500 ohms.

Power drain from a 110-volt line is 125 watts. Dimensions are 6¾ x 8½ x 16¾".

This amplifier is available for portable motion picture work in a carrying case with two matched dynamic speakers. The entire system, amplifier and its self-contained power supply circuits, speakers and carrying case, weighs 45 pounds, and when folded measures 17 x 17 x 7 inches.

of coming into the city on a pleasure trip. I am going to do that in London."

But in the United States, it was pointed out, the trend of the motion picture theatre has been one of physical decentralization—the cinema is returning to the neighborhood where it is more conveniently accessible, with its seating capacity accordingly reduced, allowing an investment small enough to permit profitable operation and moderate admission prices.

Mr. Doyle smiled, leaned forward a little in his chair. "I am glad you mentioned that. It is something I have given a lot of thought to. And I've got my scheme all worked out. I don't want to tell you anything about it yet, but it fits into that neighborhood theatre plan perfectly."

He was tickling a very irritable bump of curiosity. What was this scheme?

"A new kind of theatre," smiled Mr. Doyle. "I cannot tell you more. But it will revolutionize the motion picture theatre business."

An exasperating point at which to terminate an interview! But that was precisely what he did.—George Schutz.

Recent Developments for Modernizing Speaker Systems

● How new equipment on the open market and new principles of design are making reproducer systems of today's quality available at low cost

By H. C. ROLLS

MOST VALUABLE to exhibitors of all the many developments in loudspeakers is the appearance on the open market of reproducers of theatre size and power that operate entirely by means of permanent magnets and need no exciter current or exciter current supply apparatus. Such speakers not only provide marked economy in installation and maintenance, but remove an entire system of electrical circuits from theatre consideration, and consequently eliminate some dozens of possible causes for trouble and stoppage of the show.

The new feature of these speakers does not lie in the use of a permanent magnet in place of an electro-magnetic field winding, but in the use of a permanent magnet in association with the dynamic form of reproducer construction.

The magnetic speaker, proper, is old—and useless for theatre purposes, except possibly as a projection room monitor. It is merely a loud-talking telephone receiver, and its construction and operation are readily understood by looking into any telephone receiver that may be available. The dynamic type of construction, which distinguishes the new permanent magnet speakers, is very different, more efficient and capable of handling far greater power.

In the telephone receiver will be found a horseshoe magnet. In the long type used in public telephone booths and on the standard desk set, the horseshoe is lengthened to the appearance of a bulky hairpin. The two ends are drawn down to smaller dimensions, and wound with many turns of fine wire. In headphones, hearing aid phones or French phones, the horseshoe is nearly a circle, with the ends bent back into the center of the circle, and then brought up to meet the diaphragm, these poles also being wound with many turns of fine wire. Vibrating speech current flows through the wire and either reinforces or opposes the magnetic pull of the permanent magnet, causing the center of the diaphragm to vibrate accordingly. If the speech current is too strong, the diaphragm center will be pulled inward and touch the pole pieces, and the phone will rattle.

OLD MAGNETIC TYPE

In the magnetic speaker of older type, the diaphragm was the cone, its center fixed firmly to an iron armature that vibrated with the changing magnetic attraction. If volume became too high, the armature touched the pole pieces and the speaker rattled. If, on the other hand, the construction were changed to permit the speaker to handle high volume (this being done by increasing the original distance between pole pieces and armature) the speaker was relatively insensitive to low volume, since the increased distance over which the magnetic force had to act reduced its effectiveness when that force was weak.

These magnetic speakers could be made to reproduce either a whisper or a shout, but not to serve well for both purposes, and hence were never used in theatres, except as monitors.

The dynamic speaker operates on a different principle. Speech current is not fed to a stationary coil that acts upon an armature or a diaphragm, but to a coil consisting of a very few turns of wire (carrying higher amperage) and fastened to the vibrating cone. This speech coil rides freely in a slot provided for it in the core of the magnet. It vibrates in virtue of the interaction between the steady magnetic field, and the varying magnetic field created by the speech current flowing through it. Because it is mounted and moves in a slot of the core of the magnet, it cannot hit anything when it moves over long distances for high volume—in some speakers the length of its path is a quarter of an inch, or more. Because it is always in the slot, the speech coil of the dynamic speaker responds proportionately to any volume, low or high.

The dynamic type of construction permitted speaker reproduction at high power, but to provide a magnetic field of comparable power an electro-magnet was needed. Permanent magnets were not sufficiently powerful. The electro-magnet required a source of d.c., filtered to remove hum.

Direct current field excitation has been supplied in theatres in many ways. The power requirements are fairly large. Separate motor-generators have been and are used for the purpose. Storage batteries were used at one time. A tap taken from the d.c. arc supply proved very useful and economical, provided suitable switching and filtering were included in the line running from the arc supply to the speakers. Usually it was also necessary to include heavy-duty rheostats to "drop" or waste enough voltage to bring down the arc supply voltage to the lower value required by the speaker fields. In some systems, speaker field supply was taken from the amplifier power circuits, and the speaker windings did double duty as filter chokes in the amplifier power supply arrangement.

All of these systems required running field supply wires as well as speech wires from the projection room to the screen. All provided fruitful sources of trouble, ranging from loss of sound caused by outage in the speaker field circuits to excessive hum caused by a defect in the speaker field filters.

In some cases "a.c." speakers were used; that is, each speaker mounted its own rectifier tube or copper-oxide "stack," and its own filter condensers, and required only an a.c. line, suitably fused and provided with switches, for its excitation.

NEW MAGNETIC TYPE

The new permanent magnet speakers do away with all these complications. They are called permanent magnet dynamic speakers, because they follow the dynamic form of construction previously described, as distinct from the permanent magnet magnetic speakers which are merely loud-talking telephones.

The new speakers need no field supply of any kind, neither d.c. nor a.c. They cannot create hum in the sound. They can reproduce hum that arises elsewhere in the system, but cannot add any of their own.

In installation they save the cost of running field wires back stage, or fusing and switching such wires, and all the cost of whatever form of exciter current supply may be used, whether a special rectifier at several hundred dollars, a motor-generator, or a tap taken from the arc wiring with its associated rheostat, meter, switches and filter.

In maintenance they save the cost of rectifier tubes, if such are used, or the cost of periodic servicing of a motor generator, and all the cost of the current previously necessary to excite speaker fields of any kind.

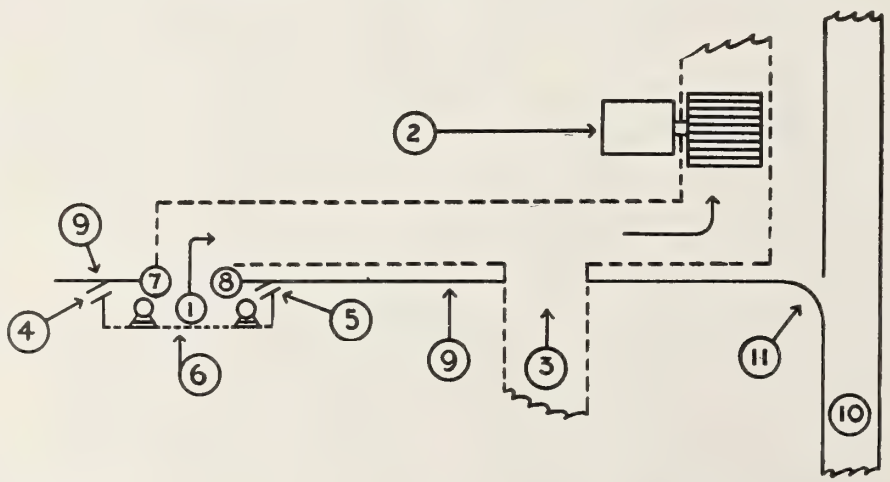
Likewise, they eliminate an indefinite number of causes of trouble, ranging from open circuit in the wiring to a variety of possible defects in the field supply rectifier.

These speakers were not invented in sound laboratories, but by metallurgists, who found new and more effective magnetic alloys. A few years ago they would have been impossible, because the alloys that produce their powerful magnetic fields did not then exist. In these new combinations of metals, which can be magnetized more strongly than any metals previously known, iron (the magnetic element that was formerly the chief constituent of any such alloy) plays a minor part, and in some is not used at all. Aluminum and nickel are important in these new combinations, although neither is conspicuously magnetic in itself. Adaptation of these alloys to loud speaker work has resulted to date in the production of units capable of reproducing ten watts or more of sound power; four such speakers obviously being powerful enough for any except the largest theatres. In price the new speakers are moderate, ranging between the earlier "dc" and "ac" models of comparable quality.

FREQUENCY RANGE

The introduction of high frequency "tweeter" speakers, a few years ago, resulted in a marked improvement in the naturalness of theatre sound, but these speakers, as commercially available, had one drawback. Their power handling capacity was sometimes very low, requiring an uneconomically large number of them for full theatre coverage. Where such numbers were not installed, the improvement in sound quality was confined to a limited area, and the contrast was sometimes painfully noticeable when the patron moved from an aisle located in the high frequency "beam" to a seat that was not so located. The writer knows of one case in which a patron asked if he could have his seat moved into the aisle!

Two remedies have now been provided for this condition. One has been to substitute for the special tweeter speaker simple radio dynamic speakers (now also available in permanent magnet types) that are good up to 8,000 cycles, which many radio speakers are, even though deficient at the low end of the sound spectrum. Such speakers are less expensive and greater numbers of them can be used. More than 8,000 cycles is not necessary in any theatre, since more is not placed today on any film.



A second remedy is provided in the very interesting Shearer system, in which one such speaker is mounted in a sound chamber and operates through multiple flared openings which point to every part of the theatre. The tendency of the higher sound frequencies to travel in a straight line is well known, and the combination of a radio speaker good up to 8,000, having a substantial power handling capacity, with a multiple-flare baffle of the Shearer type, can provide full high frequency reproduction to every seat of a large auditorium.

Low frequency sound reproduction has also had due attention from speaker manufacturers of late; and dynamic units ranging from 12 inches to 18 inches are now available, with response guaranteed by reputable makers to extend downward to 40 cycles or below. The writer knows of one such speaker, of unquestioned reputation, which, on actual test, has reproduced satisfactorily sounds from 20 to 8,000 cycles, although warranted by its maker only from 6,000 to 40. With such speakers (now available either in electro-dynamic or permanent magnet dynamic construction) the use of separate bass and tweeter units becomes unnecessary, except in the presence of unusual acoustic conditions, and a further economy is made possible by using one set of speakers, with one set of wiring and no filters, for fully extended frequency reproduction comparable to the best sound recorded so far.

FREQUENCY DISTORTION

The cheapness of modern high power amplifiers has made practicable another advance tending toward finer theatre quality. It is well known that many sound systems today suffer not so much from restricted frequency range as from distortion within the range they cover, and a very large percentage of that distortion has always arisen in the speakers themselves, or in their baffles. When amplifier wattage cost the theatre (for installation) something in the order of $1,000 per watt, speaker efficiency to conserve the power delivered was more important than the best possible sound quality. Hence exponential baffles, for most efficient coupling of the speaker diaphragm to the air to be moved, were in favor, and the distortion inescapable with even the best baffle had to be tolerated. Today, however, when perfectly good theatre amplifiers can be bought at from $1.50 to $10 per watt, speaker efficiency is less vital, and it is practicable to use more speakers which are less efficient, but which also create less distortion. The dynamic type with relatively large-area cone, operating either on a flat baffle or (for acoustic distribution) through a short, non-exponential flare, has come strongly into favor as against the earlier type of "unit" mounted at the base of a long, bulky, heavy horn that required several feet behind the screen, cost as much as some complete modern systems, and added distortion to the sound.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

A PROJECTIONIST'S OWN DEVICE FOR SOUND TESTS

A SHORT TIME ago, in Lima, Ohio, I met a projectionist—Theodore P. Hover—whose extraordinary interest in projection and continual experimentation in projection technics, immediately suggested some paragraphs about him in these columns. The design and layout of the projection room of the Ohio theatre, where he works, are his. And he maintains a well equipped workshop where he conducts his investigations and from which he frequently emerges with a new gadget for his projection room, or with a new idea concerning the why's and wherefore's of various projection processes. I asked Mr. Hover to write me, when it was convenient, about his projection room and his workshop activities, and this he has done so well that I need merely to append his letter, which describes a noteworthy device of Hover's making for the testing of sound equipment operations:

"Enclosed find photographs of a portion of my projection room. The front wall is flat black across its entire length, extending from one foot below the ports to the sound absorbing panel near the ceiling [which is visible in the upper section of Figure 1].

"This sound absorbing panel came into being as a result of an order to get rid of a lot of our inch-thick fireproof tile left over from acoustical treatment of the theatre. With them we constructed a mosaic panel extending from the black panel up 2 feet, to within 6 inches of the ceiling. These tiles also were placed in panels on the projection, rewind and washroom doors, and on both sides of the generator room door in order to effect complete absorption of the generator hum.

"We constructed sound baffles in the lens ports thus: The wall is 16 inches thick. For each lens port four pieces of acoustic Celotex [Acousti-Celotex] were so cut that they fitted inside the opening tightly. One was placed flush with the inside and one flush with the outside wall. The remaining two were equally spaced between them. The white light was then projected on each in turn, the outline of the beam marked thereon in pencil, and the beam opening cut 0.25 of an inch larger, top, bottom and sides, than the beam itself. The plates were then painted flat black, reinstalled and secured in place with small wooden wedges. We prefer this system to projecting through glass. While perhaps not quite as efficient acoustically, optically it is a great improvement.

"Concerning our test equipment, the audio-oscillator is a beat-note type, construction details of which may be found in most radio magazines. The oscilloscope I showed you is more complicated than is required for use in the average projection room. A simplified version may now be built by the use of a kit of essentials obtainable from any of the larger radio stores at a cost of about $2. The important parts are a revolving mirror, a neon discharge tube (must not be confused with a neon lighting tube), and an output transformer.

"The neon tube is so constructed that when 250 volts, or nearly that, is applied to its terminals, a tiny arc or break-down occurs in a ⅛-inch space between electrodes. Any increase in voltage above this point causes a column of neon light to rise in the tube. Any voltage drop causes a reverse effect. The column of light is much like an electrical 'thermometer' which rises and falls in direct proportion to the applied voltage. The current supply for the tube may be taken directly from the plates of the audio-amplifier, but we prefer the standard output transformer originally used for push-pull output tubes to variable voice coil taps. As the load is less than 10 milliamperes, even the lightest of transformers will be satisfactory.

"The two leads of the primary, originally intended for the plates of the output tubes, are connected directly to the neon tube. The center tap of the primary is not used. A selector switch permits matching the voice coil of the sound amplifier to the voice coil taps of the transformer. In effect the output of the sound amplifier is stepped up to a sufficient voltage to register on the neon tube.

"The rotating mirror in this case is a 3x4.5-inch sheet of flat copper, silver plated on both sides. Best results are had with the mirror rotating 50 to 200 r.p.m. The reflection from the neon tube is viewed in the rotating mirror. When the up and down motions of the neon light are viewed in this rotating mirror, the longer and shorter images of the light, which correspond to successive waves and also to successive intervals of time, appear side by side [see Figure 2].

"When the rotating mirror is in perfect synchronism with any particular sound wave, that wave image appears to be stationary on the mirror. Other frequencies, higher or lower, will appear to be moving to the right or left in the mirror. The speed of the mirror is not critical unless one particular frequency is to be closely examined, in which case the variable speed control can be operated in order to bring about synchronism.

"In effect the light emitted by the tube fluctuates in direct proportion to the input of the sound amplifier, the rotating mirror permitting a view in much the same manner as does the rotating shutter of a pro-

"We found the best motor available for this work to be one taken from an old ticket register. It has a high torque at variable speeds.

"A rheostat was placed in series with the 110-volt motor supply, and the whole assembly was mounted in a case, the interior of which was painted black. The neon tube must be parallel with the motor shaft and so mounted that when it is lighted its reflection may be viewed in the mirror.

"And now as to its practical use. To set the exciter lamps, the oscilloscope is hooked to the amplifier and the lamp is focused as nearly as possible by the eye. The projector is then placed in operation without film, and the fader opened until the tiny, jagged lines of a noise oscillogram appears on the mirror. This is caused by the vibration of the exciter lamp filament, which action modulates the light beam enough to cause a high-frequency noise to be heard in the loud speakers; also it is registered upon the mirror. The lamp is then carefully focused until the noise oscillogram has disappeared. It will be found that this focal setting is very critical; once reached, the best of results are assured.

"The noise from a microphonic tube will immediately show up as a noise oscillogram if the tube is touched or slightly vibrated. When a shallow noise oscillogram appears and tubes and other equipment are apparently in good condition, one may expect a noisy photocell. This may be checked by removing or disconnecting the cell, which should stop the noise.

"Loose elements in the optical system are more common than supposed, as are loose brackets holding the exciter lamp assembly and the optical system. These may be checked by opening wide the gain control or fader and tapping the suspected element with a hammer made from a rubber eraser fastened on a stick or lead pencil. Both these troubles will show up instantly with the slightest vibration. Poor joints in the wiring also show up and are characterized by bright and jagged noise oscillograms.

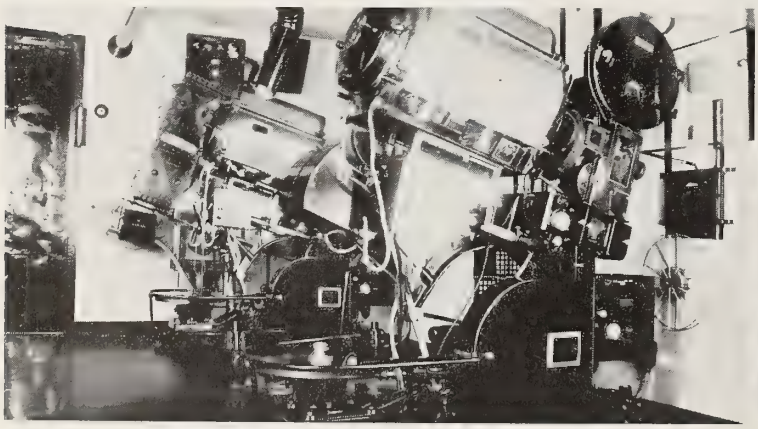
"This instrument also makes an excellent vibration analyzer. After making sure that there were no noise sources in our theatre amplifier, we hooked a Western Electric 4A reproducer to the input; however, any good phonograph pickup will do. Instead of a phonograph needle we used a 3-inch darning needle for a test prod. Care should be taken in handling this test prod so as to avoid damaging the reproducer unit, which is very fragile. This instrument may be held in the hand, and the point of the needle be placed in the very center of the constant speed shaft in order to check for gear noise or vibration. When the gain control is opened wide there should be practically no noise oscillogram.

"We found this unit of the greatest value in setting up the bevel-gear which drives the Micarta gear on the constant speed shaft of our Western Electric reproducer. The test prod was placed on the center of the constant speed shaft, and also on the bracket which supports the steel gear and drive shaft (708-A drive). When this gear was set too loose, back lash was quickly registered on the mirror. When too tight, the gear chatter also showed up with a distinctive noise oscillogram. Both of these noise oscillograms show up as parasitic wave forms which follow, and in some cases overshadow, the wave registered by normal gear operation.

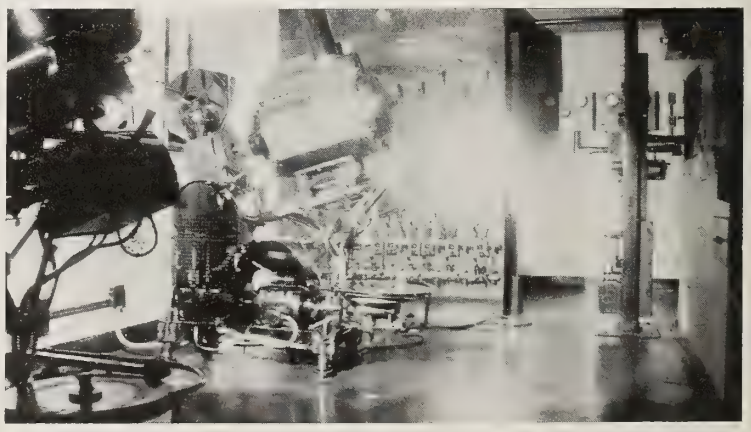
"This test prod will find innumerable uses in the projection room where a little adjustment and perhaps a close checking of the type of lubrication used can effect wonders in reducing gear noise, vibration, and wear on parts.

With a 9000-cycle loop, this instrument may be used as an ultra-sensitive output meter for matching the output of two projectors, testing each for the highest wave form.

"Innumerable other uses for this machine will probably occur to projectionists. I would greatly appreciate hearing of any new uses.



"While the properties of the neon discharge tube have been recognized for many years, I believe the use of this simplified instrument in the projection room is original with me."



This deserves very close study. I believe Brother Hover, who is a member of Local 349, has supplied the profession with a convenient method of checking up on the proper performance of sound equipments.

plied to me. You were then on your way to Chicago and answered, in part, from Toledo. Mr. Richardson, your lecture to exchange managers and theatre managers on that trip certainly had an effect. Since that time I have been receiving prints in, by comparison, really wonderful condition. Inclosed find one million perfectly sincere thanks. You have yourself been a projectionist and must know the grief in trying to put on a good show with junk films.

"I hand you herewith a small sample of film that gives the blue high-intensity effect on the screen when projected with low-intensity. Not only is it perfectly clear, but also is very easy upon the eyes. Why would it not be possible to put out all prints with that tint, and thus wean the smaller theatres away from low-intensity, yellow-tinted light?"

The tint of screen illumination is an old, much discussed matter. Some prefer the high brilliancy of high intensity, with its bluish tone. Others prefer mazda and low-intensity, with its comparatively amber tint. In my opinion this is a matter deserving much more attention and careful investigation than it has as yet received.

Millions of people in this country and Canada and elsewhere each day gaze intently and continuously at motion picture theatre screens for an hour and a half to two hours, and elimination of fatigue depends to a considerable extent not only upon the amount of light, but also upon its nature.

A PROJECTION ROOM DELUXE

FROM Charles F. Horstman, supervisor of projection for RKO Theatres, comes this letter:

"Dear Mr. Richardson, inclosed please find photographs of the projection room, and its equipment, in the new RKO Grand theatre in Columbus, Ohio, which I regard as typical of modern design in every respect.

"The theatre seats 1200, on two floors. Acoustical excellence is insured by a proper combination of acoustic plaster and rockwool. The theatre is strictly modern throughout. Even the projection room is acoustically treated, to the end that machinery noises, so far as possible, be absorbed.

"The projection distance is 112 feet, with a 16x21-foot screen image. The installation includes Super-Simplex projector mechanisms on Chicago Cinema pedestals. The light sources are Peerless Magnarcs, the projection lenses Bausch & Lomb. Sound reproduction and projection is by RCA Photophone. The Magnarcs receive current from a Hertner multiple arc motor-generator, of which there are two, located in a room immediately beneath the projection room, with direct access provided thereto through a steel trap door in the door of the projection room [see Figure 1]. The projection room is well ventilated and well illuminated.

"One unique feature is that after the arc has been struck, both the sound and projection control equipment is handled from the special panel located immediately below the observation port [see Figure 2]. Observe the generous size of the port. The panel occupies little space and enables the projectionist to observe the screen perfectly while effecting changeover. It obviates all need for acrobatics on his part while making changeovers, and by its use perfect results may and should be attained.

"Rewinding by hand is made obligatory in order to insure competent inspection of reels after each run. Reels are stored in a 'Neumade' storage reservoir, the interior of which is connected directly with the outside air. It also is protected by a standard sprinkler head."

This is, indeed, a commendable layout. However, I cannot agree that rewinding by hand necessarily operates to insure competent inspection. My own view is that projectionists regard it as unnecessary and, feeling annoyed at having to do it, will just rush it through at high speed without any inspection at all, unless indeed they know or believe there is something wrong with the film. Personally, after many years of observation, I am very thoroughly "sold" on motor rewinding at speed (not in excess of 6 minutes, though 5 minutes is not really objectionable for each 1000 feet of film). In this way, if the rewinder is properly equipped, competent inspection can be made if required or desired, and at the same time damage to film through too rapid rewinding is avoided.

If I could believe that rewinding by hand would insure competent inspection, or for that matter any inspection worthy of the name, I might agree with Mr. Horstman. However, as matters lie, I hold the net result will, on the whole, not be beneficial.

Considering modern projection room lighting procedure, the lighting of this room is distinctly above par, for the reason that the indirect ceiling fixtures are opaque. But nevertheless there remains a well illuminated ceiling, much of which comes well within the vision of the projectionist when in working position. According to my view the light should all come from the rear, falling upon the back of the projectionist when in working position beside the projector.

It is not really necessary to light the projection room so brightly during projection that reading may be accomplished without eye strain. It is more to the purpose that "reading" the screen critically be made possible, or so it seems to me.

In most essentials, of course, this projection room is well designed, with equipment and related apparatus conveniently located. The panel under the port deserves special commendation. It certainly should make for efficiency. I thank Brother Horstman for giving us a chance to "visit" the Grand theatre in this manner.

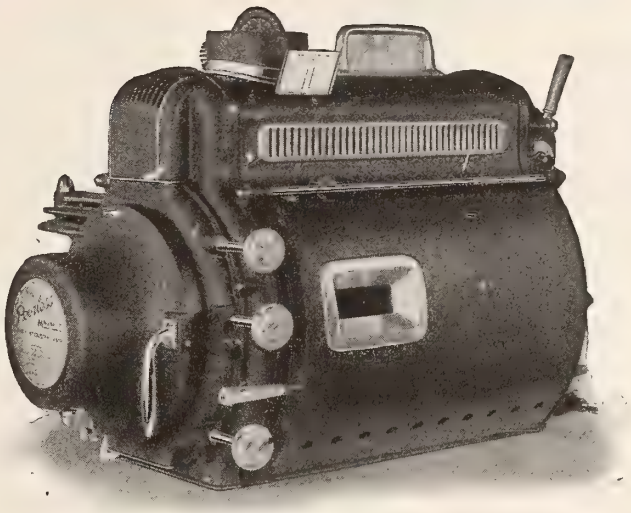
SOME BITS OF PROJECTION HISTORY

JOHN L. SEYMOUR of Houston, Tex., asks, "Will you be good enough to advise as to just who really invented the motion picture projector as we now have it, and when the invention was made. Also when was the first motion picture shown in public and where, and who was the projectionist. Also who is the oldest living projectionist. A lot of questions, but I believe the answers will trouble you very little."

Well, Friend Seymour, that depends upon the exact meaning of your queries. The intermittent movement now in use in all projectors was first made into essentially its present form and applied to projectors by Thomas Armat, who is still with us, residing in Washington, D. C. This was done in the fall of 1895. Mr. Armat also applied the principle of slack film, ahead of and behind the intermittent sprocket at about the same time. These two things marked the completion of the projector mechanism principles as we know it today, though of course numerous ones have added very many refinements through the years.



The first public showing of motion pictures in a theatre was made in Koster and Bial's Music Hall on 14th Street, not far from Broadway, in New York City on April 23, 1895. Mr. Armat himself was projectionist. The only living person who has followed projection as a profession continuously since the summer of 1896 until today is William Reed of Atlantic City.

CURRENT "PHASE," MIRROR CURVATURE AND TENSION

A NUMBER of questions have come from Benjamin D. Shnitka, Calgary, Alberta. "First," he asks, "what would be the difference in phase between currents when one is at zero negative and the other at maximum positive? Second, why is a convex spherical mirror equal to half its radius in curvature? Third, what is the tension, in ounces, at the projector aperture?"

You apparently have a wrong impression of the term "phase." It has nothing to do with pressure—nothing whatever except as it may be regarded as difference in time that two or more alternating currents reach maximum and minimum in voltage insofar as has to do with the alternations. You, Friend Shnitka, have a Bluebook of Projection. Examine the figure on page 21. You see there, at B, two lines representing three alternating currents. The top and bottom curve peaks represent maximum voltage at each alternation. The length of the line represents time.

Phase, as applies to a.c., means time-spacing of voltage peaks of alternations. It means two or more currents so joined in a circuit that their alternations reach maximum voltage at regular but different intervals of time.

As to your second question, mirrors used in projectors and elsewhere in the industry, while silvered on their convex side, function optically on the opposite or concave side. They therefore are regarded as concave mirrors. I think you meant to inquire why the focus of a spherical, concave mirror is equal to half its radius in curvature, and have accordingly reworded your question.

In speaking of the focal length of a lens, optical engineers accept the definition which associates parallel pencils of light entering the lens and the distance from some point within the lens, to that point or plane where these parallel rays are brought to a focus, as being the focal length of the lens. Exactly the same thing is carried out, in principle, with reflectors. If parallel rays of light enter the reflector, the point at which they are brought to a focus, if measured from the reflection surface, is referred to as the focal length of the reflector.

Working the other way around, if a point source of light be located at the radius of the mirror's curvature, each ray of light going toward the mirror surface would meet that (remember it is spherical) surface perpendicularly (at right angles thereto) and therefore be reflected back exactly upon its own path.

It so happens that as the light source is moved toward the mirror, it finally arrives at a position where the angle made by the rays of light to the reflecting surface is such that the light reflected from the mirror becomes parallel to the center line, axis, or "normal" of the mirror. The position thus found is the focal length, which in spherical mirrors happens to be one half the distance from the mirror to the radius of its curvature.

Carefully remembering the optical law: "The angle of incidence is always equal to the angle of reflection," so with a compass and protractor, lay it out for yourself and you will see how simply and satisfactorily you have answered your own question.

Replying to your third question: As I remember it, some years ago the Society of Motion Picture Engineers did recommend a certain number of ounces of pull to overcome the braking pull of the aperture tension shoes. This was, I believe set up as "recommended practice."

VOLT-AMMETERS AND WATTMETERS

SAMUEL L. TOWNSEND, Portland, Me., asks, "will you tell me exactly what is the difference between a volt-ammeter and a wattmeter, if any. I've been told these instruments are not the same."

The term volt-ammeter and ammeter indicate the same instrument. It is defined in Hawken's Electrical Dictionary as "An electrical instrument designed to measure directly the products of the amperes and volts in a circuit, and to give its readings in watts—a volt-ammeter. In the dynometer type there are two coils, or sets of coils, one of which is fixed and the other movable. The movable coil is connected to the current circuit and the fixed coil in the pressure circuit, or the reverse. The induction type is used on a.c. circuits. In this type electromagnets are arranged near a vane in which eddy currents are caused to flow, which react upon the magnetic field and the record made is proportional to the reaction."

You thus see, Friend Townsend that a wattmeter and volt-ammeter are one and the same thing; also that they are made for both a.c. and d.c.

PROJECTION ROOMS AND SOUND ABSORBTION

TOO MUCH attention cannot be paid to lining projection rooms with sound-absorbing materials. Were this done more efficiently, unquestionably it would be quite possible to reduce lens ports to the dimensions of the light beam and leave it open in very many rooms and in practically all of them were proper baffles inserted.

There is a considerable amount of noise in projection rooms. That is inevitable. High speed machinery makes quite a lot of it. It cannot be eradicated but most of it may be absorbed. Then, too, there is more or less conversation even in one-man rooms. Managers enter and hold conversation. Laws or no laws, rules or no rules, visitors come and conversation ensues.

With walls and ceiling covered with really efficient sound proofing material, these noises may be so well absorbed that they will never reach the auditorium and there is no ill effect, except only the relatively small cost of installation.

In view of these facts it would seem advisable that in future all projection rooms have their interior surfaces thoroughly sound-proofed.

BLUEBOOKS IN A BUNCH FOR THE ANTIPODES

ILLUSTRATING the widespread influence of the Quigley Publications, in addition to the many copies of the new Bluebook of Projection previously shipped to that far-off continent, a single order of 150 books went forward to Australia during the month of July. Australia has many large, beautiful motion picture theatres, progressive management and high-grade projectionists. It therefore should and very evidently does realize the importance of excellent projection and the necessity for taking proper steps to secure it.

The rapid sale of the new Bluebook was a genuine surprise to officials of the Quigley Publishing Company, this being the first edition of this work that it has handled. A good sale was expected, but when I asserted it would run into many thousands of copies there was some skepticism.

Year by year theatre managements and projectionists are coming to a keener realization of the high importance of excellence in projection with maximum economy in production thereof. With every edition since the first I have tried hard to improve the Bluebook of Projection, with apparent success. The first edition that appeared as a bound book (there was a paper covered one put out in 1907) was copyrighted in 1910. Only one man has expressed dissatisfaction. He, it developed, was not a projectionist, but a radio man who bought the book under misapprehension, believing it to be concerned with radio.

STUDIES MANAGEMENT AS WELL AS PROJECTION

FROM Aubrey E. Swearingen, projectionist of the Crescent theatre in Woodville, Texas, comes this letter:

"Dear Old Friend: Your Comments in BETTER THEATRES is one of the most welcome things that reach this theatre. Every word is read and thoroughly digested. When that is finished I turn to articles about management to get that viewpoint. By so doing I not only serve myself by improving my knowledge of projection, but also am enabled to see things from the manager's standpoint. Having been a theatre owner myself, I know the manager really has his side, or point-of-view, and his troubles, too.

"By careful work I have been enabled to lower the operating expense [as applied to projection, I take it.—F. H. R.] by fully 35% during the past two years, and through suggestions as to advertising campaigns and other things have been able to increase my income very materially. Naturally the manager and I get along fine.

"I realize the reaction of the public to the picture depends to a considerable extent upon how it is placed before them, and that in its turn is dependent upon the skill, care and careful work of the projectionist. Believe me, Mr. Richardson, it gives me great pleasure to hear some pleased patron say, 'That certainly was a good show last night.' It makes me feel that I have done my part well, for if I had not the above remark would not have been made.

"Upon receipt of film it is inspected carefully for loose splices and rewound on special reels, with a round-edge, polished washer inserted at the change-over point. The washer is a sure-fire alarm. It does no damage of any sort. The only precaution is, don't open the magazine door until the projector has come to rest, lest the washer drop out and possibly get where it might do some damage [Not with present day enclosed mechanisms, I think.—F. H. R.]

"We use Syncrofilm soundheads with a good amplifier and are able to get wonderful tone and economical operation. There has been just one drawback. The film cuts into the fixed flange of the plate on which it rides, permitting the sound track to travel too far to one side with relation to the light beam. My remedy has been to very carefully cut the flange from this plate when it becomes worn, and to make one of harder steel exactly the same shape as the old one, but long enough to extend back beneath the plate.

"Incidentally, I like a.c. much better than I do the battery-powered equipments; also, I am in favor of the 1,000 foot reels. [I do not agree with you in that last and anyhow we will, barring a miracle, have the 2,000-footers September 1.—F. H. R.] I do all my own repair work and have perfected several small tools that enable me to make very fine adjustments. Mr. Richardson, I enjoy every one of your articles and wish for your long continued health, success and—help."

For which many thanks. Woodville is a small town just north of Beaumont, Texas, and is not far from Palestine, where I lived along about 1890.

It is good to hear from projectionists who respect their profession and take real pride in their work, realizing how very much depends upon its high excellence. I congratulate Brother Swearingen.

in considering this phase of the matter we must remember that, here in America at least, the useful life of a picture is short at best, therefore this saving would probably be only substantially helpful in the matter of supplying a few small, obscure theatres.

It is probable there would be somewhat less wear on gear trains, etc., with consequent reduction in up-keep bills. As to any saving in electric power, however, there would be little, if any, for the reason that while it is very true that the rotating shutter cuts off somewhat in excess of 50% of the light, all the rest available to the collector element is concentrated upon the aperture (less waste of the spot, of course). But with all non-intermittent projectors it is necessary to illuminate in excess of two full frames at the aperture, plus a more or less equal spot waste, so that when it is all added up, economy, insofar as has to do with electric power, seems to be, if anything, a bit in favor of the intermittent projector.

And now here is the pay-off. I have witnessed a very close approach to perfection in non-intermittent projection. This occurred several years ago, though for some reason the projector never was marketed. As I remember it there was some little "bug" that could not be ironed out. That has, up to this time, been the case with all of them, save one that I shall very soon examine into, which inventor is right now trying to introduce.

Non-intermittent projection does provide what, for lack of a better term, I must describe as a "smoother" screen image, and therefore one that is more beautiful and somewhat more easy on the eyes. However, non-intermittent projection was given a practical try-out by S. L. Rothafel at the Capitol theatre some years ago. It did not prove satisfactory, for just what reason I am now unable to recall, and was rejected after extended trial. And there we are.

TRAVELLING SHOW USUALLY IMPRACTICABLE

L. WARNER of Detroit, Mich., writes, "During a trip through the West I discovered there were many small towns and communities in which were no picture shows. The thought came that with a suitable traveling outfit one might build up a good business by visiting them regularly. But as I am unfamiliar with the motion picture business I turn to you for advice.

"First of all, what do you thing of the idea? Secondly, where might I obtain competent information regarding necessary equipment and its price? Thirdly, would it be necessary to have a projectionist's license?"

There are other queries, but I think it unnecessary to set them forth as the success of such a plan would be extremely questionable, even for a man well versed in the show business and capable of producing good results with such an outfit.

It is one of those things that on the surface look every reasonable. But many have, in years gone by, gone broke trying it out.

The difficulties are plenty. First, the expense of operating such an outfit is very much higher than would be imagined. Secondly, one has to buck delays due to breakdowns, bad roads, rain storms, and what have you. Thirdly, it is not merely a matter of having a projectionist's license, Friend Warner, but of ability to handle a motion picture-sound outfit, under difficult conditions at best, expertly. That requires experience and expert knowledge.

I would be very willing to help you by supplying the information asked for, but I know of no one having the kind of outfit necessary, or just what booking arrangements might be made.

Another thing: You apparently overlook the fact that most of those apparently isolated communities are, after all, within a short motor run of a motion picture theatre. Twenty to thirty miles was once a long distance. Now it is just a pleasant ride. Not long ago I was visiting a friend in a small town where there was a little theatre. Some one proposed that we all go to the show. "All right," said our host, "but let's go to Middletown. There is a real nice theatre there and it's only 18 miles." So we all piled into his chariot and went.

I am printing some of your various questions, Friend Warner, and my answers, for the reason that I get occasional letters of inquiry from people who have the same idea. The thing seems, as before related, very plausible, but it is even less practicable now than it was 25 years ago. Even then of the many who tackled it, few were successful, and they in only a very small way. The ones who for a time made a small-time "go" of it were mostly all family outfits, so that no hired help was necessary.

A THEATRE MANAGER'S AMATEUR THEATRE

FROM W. L. Bourne, manager of the Star theatre in Fennville, Mich., comes a description of an eighteen-seat theatre which he operates solely for his own amusement. He says, "Noting your request for photographs of projection rooms, I enclose two of my own that may be of interest to your readers, as the theatre seats only 18 people and gives shows, without admission price, to my friends upon occasion. Incidentally there are a number of theatres of the such amateur class in the surrounding territory. One in Grand Rapids seats 50; it is over a garage. Mr. Heffern, the owner, built it several years ago and now runs the very latest sound-on-film prints. Articles from that gentleman appear in the Motion Picture Herald quite frequently under 'What the Picture Did for Me.'

"Then, too, there is the Atomic theatre, 406 Spring Street, Michigan City, seating 20, owned and operated by Mr. William Higley. It uses sound-on-film prints, but only the old ones, I believe. Still another small amateur house, the Viking, operates in Akron, Ohio, using sound-on-disc.

"Like most owners of these 'theatres,' I operate mine chiefly for the education and amusement derived therefrom. I purchase

THE ANSWER:

IF YOU ARE going to place new toilet rooms in the basement, have the stairs from foyer enter into a lounge, place each individual toilet room as far remote from each other as possible, or on opposite ends of lounge.

Remove the felt from walls and install sound-absorbing tiles, such as Nu-Wood or Celotex. These tiles can be cemented to paster base. By using a pattern and borders, pleasing results may be obtained.

A modern new front may be installed by facing the present front with a structural glass like Vitrolite, metal, or Formica.

The installation of a new ticket booth and illuminated poster cabinets will add to the improvement.

THE QUESTION:

ABOUT A YEAR ago I had to take over some theatre equipment on a debt, then last May a chain of theatres secured a long lease on the building and I had to move my seats, screens and all equipment. I have been trying to get another location but up to the present time I have found only one where pay roll and population seemed sufficient to support a theatre. This is a garage.

It is a well constructed brick building with steel bridge construction supporting a gravel and tar roof, large steel frames with tilting glass windows, wood and plastic partition between the store buildings and rooms. I have a very large screen and only use about a 10x13 picture. Have about 16 foot clearing from floor to lower part of roof supports. What we want to know is if a ceiling would be necessary and where it would have to be placed—just under the roof or under the roof supports? About 5 or 6 feet below the roof? What kind of material would this have to be, a cloth or some such material, or Celotex? How about the rear and side walls, should they be covered?

There is a good cement floor, and could it be used without installing an inclined floor above it by raising the screen up, and zig zag the seats, so that the seat in the next row in front would be between, no one sitting exactly in front of a person until the second row? I will have plenty of room for this as I will not need more than 300 or 350 seats.—R. I. D.

THE ANSWER:

BY ALL MEANS, construct a ceiling, and it should be placed on the bottom of the roof trusses. The joists supporting the ceiling can be placed on the lower cord of the trusses. Any sound-absorbing tile or boards, such as Celotex, Nu-Wood, etc., can be used for ceiling covering. By applying this tile in a pattern with border, a nice effect may be obtained. The same kind of materials, or wood-grained wallboards may be used for side and rear wall covering.

Some of this material comes in 4-foot widths. To obtain a pleasant effect, apply this material in horizontal layers with painted wood or chromium cover strips over joints. All such material is easily and quickly installed. It does not require decorating and it is quite inexpensive.

I am afraid that a level floor will not give satisfactory vision, even if the screen is raised to 5 feet above the floor line, and to zig-zag the seats will not help any, except for the first few rows; and besides that, this method produces a bad condition in the aisles.

If you do not want to go the expense of changing the floor, I advise you to build the last four or five rows on wood platforms about 3 inches high for each row. While this does not produce good results, it will be a great improvement over the level floor condition.

THE QUESTION:

I AM FORWARDING under separate cover, a plan of a remodeling job which has just been completed. We seem to be having some difficulty regarding the ventilation. I thought that by forwarding you the plan and giving you as much information as we are able to, you would possibly give us some suggestions that would be helpful.

First of all, the idea of putting in air-conditioning equipment is out of the question. In this part of the country, while we have very warm days, our evenings are very cool. Our summer business is not as good as it is in the winter, and therefore it is not very often that the theatre has anywhere near a capacity business.

You will notice there are two 24x30 boxed-in ventilators or air passages to the out doors above the exits near the stage. Other than the entrances and inner doors of the lobby, there are no other air inlets. I might mention that this plan gives you a ceiling plan and side wall. I have also indicated where we have a 16-inch suction fan at side of building. The fan is enclosed in a pipe and draws the air outdoors.

We find with a large number of people in the theatre the air becomes muggy. This condition prevails mostly from halfway down the theatre to the back and in the balcony, especially, which has a very low ceiling.—A. J. M.

THE ANSWER:

YOU STATE in your inquiry that your business in summer is not as good as the winter. Might this not be precisely because you do not have an effective cooling system? This does not need to be an expensive refrigerating system if cold well water is obtainable, good results may be derived from the installation of air-washer units.

After giving your plans careful study, I find the trouble with your ventilating system is that not enough fresh air is provided and properly circulated and exhausted. The air intakes over exit doors near the stage are too small and should be provided with blower fans of the proper size so that the air is forced into the auditorium. In the ceiling under the balcony at least two grilles should be installed and ducts provided to exhaust this air to the outside, as under present conditions this space forms a hot-box.

The ventilators in auditorium ceiling above balcony appear to be all right except that they seem to be too small and should be located closer to rear wall. All exhaust ducts should be provided with controllable dampers.

I suggest that you call in for consultation a representative of a blower company, so that he can make a survey of present conditions and suggest to you the size of blowers and the area of grilles and ducts required. This service is generally gratis and I have no doubt that this improvement can be made at a very low cost.

THE QUESTION:

PLEASE FIND attached diagram or plan of the theatre that we have here and we want to make it modern as possible. You will note that we have a large lobby and that the theatre is under a lodging house, and the ladies' toilet is under this staircase, and the gents' toilet is back in the alley.

The lights are the old pan ceiling lights, with no wall lights. The seats have an aisle down the center. The projection room is over the ticket booth. We are using mazda on our machines and get good light and have good projection.

We have about 50 feet in the rear where the building can be extended to make more seating capacity, but the ceiling is only 16 feet on entering and slants to the stage, making it about 2 feet higher by the stage. Our screen is 9x12. We have about 1 foot space from floor to screen, and about 2 feet from screen to ceiling. We want to modernize the front and get in a few more seats and a manager's office, have modern lighting and a marquee over the sidewalk. —D. I. T.

THE ANSWER:

THE ONLY WAY I can figure out to provide space for a manager's office is to place the lobby off center with the building and to place the office along the right wall facing building. It could be about 8x12 feet. Then there would be another similar space left which could be used for a women's room. Place the men's room (as its present location is very bad) under the stairs where the women's room is now located.

Locate the ticket booth on the sidewalk line with entrance doors on each side. Set doors back flush with back of ticket booth so that they will not project beyond face of building when open. This will give a lobby 15x25 feet, which is ample in size. Place illuminated shadow boxes on each side wall and have solid doors between lobby and foyer.

I fail to figure out how it is possible to have two banks of eight seats in a row, with an aisle between, across the width of the auditorium, unless the seats and aisle are very narrow; so it is impossible to increase the seating capacity unless the building is extended in the rear.

I advise that the width of the foyer be increased to 5 or 6 feet. Place a check or storage room on the right end of the foyer to balance with extension from under stairway.

I do not quite understand the ceiling height description. You state that the ceiling is 16 feet high on entering, and about 2 feet higher near the stage, making it 18 feet. Still you state that there is only 1 foot of space from floor to screen, and 2 feet from screen to ceiling, while the screen is only 9x12 feet. Perhaps this floor is meant to be the stage floor.

No ceiling lights are required for such a narrow house. Install modern wall brackets wired in two circuits, one for house lights and the other for emergency.

The front of the theatre can be very effectively modernized by facing it with structural glass, Formica or enamel metal.

If a new marquee is to be installed, illuminate the soffit of it with indirect lighting and place attraction boards with changeable silhouette letters on three sides. The name of the theatre can be placed on each side of the marquee in channel neon letters.

With proper redecorating of the interior and the installation of drape panels on side walls, I believe you will have quite a nice theatre of modern style.

THE QUESTION:

ENCLOSED FIND sketch of present lobby. We are anxious to know how to light the lobby, also type of lights in auditorium to use during performance. We have a small town theatre, 600 seats; 400 down, 200 in balcony.

Would you arrange walls in lobby with Masonite, no wainscoting, but leave a 2 foot space at ceiling instead of running to ceiling?—L. J. M.

THE ANSWER:

THE FUNCTION of this department is to give advice and offer suggestions on specific problems rising in connection with theatre planning. We cannot supply sketches of designs or working drawings. For these you should engage an architect.

THE QUESTION:

PLEASE LET us have some plans suitable for a theatre on a lot 40x110 feet. This house must be economically constructed, yet have an attractive appearance.—T. S.

THE ANSWER:

LOOKING OVER your sketch, I find that you have solved your problem very nicely, though I do not like the idea of using a curtain between lobby and foyer. You should install doors. They will prevent unnecessary and annoying noises from penetrating into the auditorium. I also notice that there is only one set of doors at the entrance.

The step-up design in the lobby ceiling with recessed continuous light trough is quite effective, but do not make each step more than 6 feet high. Three step-ups instead of two may improve the scheme.

I do not see any reason why you should end the Masonite 2 feet from ceiling. I think it would look nicer to cover the entire wall and provide for a cornice or moulding at the intersection of wall and ceiling.

For the auditorium, I suggest the installation of new modern wall brackets about 30 inches long and 10 inches wide, made entirely of glass with metal back, these fixtures to be wired in two circuits, one for house lights and the other for emergency. These fixtures can be provided with a light strip so that several different colored bulbs of small wattage can be used.

ance without a license. This law was held valid, and the court said:

Therefore, where a State law graduates license fees for operation of theatres, in consideration of the population of towns and cities, or passes a uniform law, such law is valid unless the license fees are so high that the average theatre operator cannot afford to pay them. (36 La. Am. 94.)

RELATION OF STATE AND CITY

A COMPLETE review of recent and leading higher court cases discloses universal law as follows:

1. Any license ordinance is reasonable and valid that can be paid by the majority of theatre owners.
2. A license ordinance is uniform if it requires the owners of theatres of the same seating capacity to pay the same license fees.
3. A license ordinance is not discriminatory if all theatre owners are required to pay the same reasonable license fees under like conditions.

In many instances theatre owners have expended large sums in testing the validity of city ordinances because it was believed that the amount of the fee was unreasonable. However, it is seldom that the courts will interfere with ordinances where the testimony indicates that the average theatre owner can afford to pay the fees. It is best, under these circumstances, that theatre owners try to induce the municipal council to lower the fee, rather than to spend money testing the validity of the ordinances.

For illustration, in Higgins v. Lacroix (137 N. W. 417), it was shown that a State statute authorizes municipalities to license and regulate shows of any kind.

A town of 1,000 inhabitants passed an ordinance fixing a license fee of $200 per annum for "every moving picture show, or other show of a similar nature."

It was the contention of an owner of a theatre that the fee was unreasonable and that the ordinance was invalid. However, the court held the fee not so unreasonably high as to amount to an abuse of power, and said:

"A village council may fix a fee for a licensed calling or business which shall include the necessary cost of issuing the license, and the reasonable expense of supervision and the police control over the conduct of the business licensed."

However, if a State law requires payment of license fees by owners of theatres, a city license law is void.

For illustration, in State v. Prevo (178 North Carolina 740), it was disclosed that a State law taxed theatres $30 per year in towns having less than 5,000 inhabitants and more than 1,500. A town having a population of less than 5,000 inhabitants passed an ordinance which imposed a license tax of $60 per annum on motion picture shows. The court held the ordinance void because the city was without power to levy a tax in excess of $30, the amount collected by the State.

According to this decision the law is clearly established that a city cannot tax theatres where a State law requires payment of license fees, and does not specify that municipalities may require payment of additional license fees.

Also, a municipal council cannot enlarge the legal meaning of a State law, which authorized cities to pass valid taxation licenses. For example, in Rex v. Dimock (44 N. B.), a State law was passed which authorized city councils "to license, regulate or prevent billiard tables, bowling alleys, or other places of amusement."

A municipality enacted an ordinance imposing a license fee of $300 for each theatre. The higher court held that the municipality had no authority under the above State law to pass an ordinance requiring theatres to pay the license fees.

WHEN STATE TAX IS VOID

Frequently State laws are formulated which broadly authorize municipalities to pass theatre license fees or ordinances in accordance with the judgment of municipal officials. A State law of this nature always is void. In order that a State law of this nature shall be valid, it must clearly define in some manner the amount of the municipal license fees. The same law is applicable to city ordinances which license theatres under different fees.

For example, in Metropolis Theatre Company v. Chicago (246 Illinois 20), a city ordinance classified theatres for the purpose of levying license taxes according to the admission charged. In other words, owners of theatres charging high admission were required to pay a larger license fee than owner of theatres having lower admission prices. The court held this ordinance valid, and said:

"The power given to cities and villages to tax and regulate theatrical and other exhibitions, shows, and amusements carries with it the power to classify the subjects and to fix a different license fee for each class."

BASIS OF VALIDITY OF LICENSE TAX

SOMETIMES a license law is enacted for the purpose of obtaining sufficient money to regulate the taxed business. Under laws of this nature the amount obtainable from taxation cannot exceed the cost of the enforcement of the regulations. However, where the license fee, or taxation, is intended to enable either a State or city to secure general revenue, the amount of taxation is not dependent upon the expense of collecting the taxes, or regulating or supervising the business.

For illustration, in Mahonoy City v. Hersker (49 Pennsylvania Supreme Court 50), a city ordinance was passed which provided for the issuance of a license to theatre owners on the payment of a license fee of $3 per day. A theatre owner contended that the ordinance was void because the power of the city to impose a license fee was limited to the amount which would reimburse it for cost of reasonable police supervision. However, the court held the ordinance valid.

On the other hand, where a theatre owner is required to pay a license fee, any law requiring an additional fee for the police supervision is invalid. For example, in Waters v. Leech (3 Arkansas 110), it was shown that a city ordinance provided for a city tax of $20 per month on every theatre. The ordinance also provided that it was the duty of the city police to attend each performance for which the theatre owner should pay him a fee of $2.50 for every night of his attendance. The court promptly held the portion of the ordinance void which required payment of $2.50 fee daily.

the signs have moved inward, and there seems to be a joining of hands. In the old theatre we came from a not-too-well-lighted street and, gradually, as we entered and penetrated the depths of the theatre, we came upon more festivity and more light. The effort to maintain this illusion still exists and, while the lights become richer and more colorful, they must, of necessity, forego their dazzle. The most recent accomplishments have brought the brilliant colors from the house to the vestibule, and lobbies, and the colored signs have reached down to meet with the colors of the lobbies. It is all an effort on the part of the theatre to expose itself; to be truly natural; to have the people realize that they are being let in on the inner workings of the show. The theatre wants to let the public in on the "in."

MR. KENNEDY'S CAREER

WHEN Mr. Joseph P. Kennedy says in his interesting and provocative book, "I'm for Roosevelt," that "I have no political ambitions," he is answering an unraised question, doubtless with all sincerity, but also, one must suspect, without consulting his subconscious mind. It is not the pattern of him to be without ambitions of various sorts, and in view of the Atlantic tanned excellence of his health there seems no very close prospect of his retirement.

He has, one gathers from the text, substantial fortune. He has had action, adventure, excitements, experience a-plenty in this amusement industry, what with buying and selling RKO, operating and then liquidating most of Pathe, making Gloria productions, assaying the Radio Corporation of America and exploring Paramount. All this came incidentally after some banking and some shipbuilding.

Chapter I of Mr. Kennedy's book opens with: "Politics furnishes to government its manpower. . . . Politics . . . should be the acute concern of every citizen . . ."

Mr. Kennedy's book is a political document—ably enough done to be called an ambitious document.

E PLURIBUS UNUM

BOTH Mr. Sinclair Lewis, the author, and the motion picture industry can regard with a certain satisfied equanimity the decision of the Government of the United States, operating under the name of the Works Progress Administration, to produce on the Federal stage a dramatization of the novel "It Can't Happen Here," to open in fifteen cities.

Mr. Lewis can be pleased because the WPA project is a furtherance of the publicity campaign which he began on the pretext of the decision of the motion picture industry against the making of a screen version of his story. The furore of newspaper attention raised then vastly enhanced the sale of the book and probably extended the already wide fame of the diligent Mr. Lewis.

MEANWHILE the motion picture industry in general and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer corporation in particular, as owners of the motion picture rights, will be able to observe abstractly the progress and processes of the Federal Theatre, spending taxpayers' money, in dealing with material which for the screen was held to be a menace to public safety and internationally indiscreet.

One is to be reminded at the moment of the many pratings of militants that the motion picture does not represent the United States. Maybe it does not. It is just possible that the screen is more conservative than WPA.

REVIVALS

MR. FRANK S. NUGENT, editor of the New York Times motion picture department, has done a pleasant piece of hot weather writing with a piece "to regret the transiency of motion pictures" and charging that in letting its pictures pass on "there is an inconsistency in the motion picture industry's position." He continues:

"At one moment it is investing itself with the dignity of an art; at another it is ignoring and burying not only its primitives, but many of its finest accomplishments."

Many persons of intelligence and scholarly approach make the mistake of assuming that their interest is shared by enough people to make an audience. The few and most occasional successful revivals of old pictures have been profoundly limited. Also, the historical approach to any subject under the sun is the one least likely to attract or hold public interest. The motion picture is "today-minded" precisely because its audience is. To value, to appreciate, to be concerned with, or in anywise interested in, either the past or the future requires a degree of intelligence not distributed among the many.

THE motion picture is a going-on, a flow, a continuous cropping, even as a forest grows up out of its own mold.

Hollywood, which is more in authority today than ever before, would have it so. Hollywood consists, too, of a going-on, and on and on. Neither the vast studios nor the magnificent payrolls are to gain by taking from them the playing time of the screen to devote it to pictures they have made in years gone by.

The best and probably only practical process of bringing back the triumphs of yesterday has been demonstrated with some success by Mr. Charles Chaplin in his "Modern Times," which was a memory jar of all the comedy business he had evolved and presented in his entire prior career. Not quite so candidly, but almost as truly, all drama is like that.

The customers, in controlling majority, want it like "hot dogs," right off the griddle.

This Week

Again "In the Black"'

Motion picture earnings are running well "in the black" for the first time since the depression, with further increases in admissions in sight, to be reflected in distributors' profits at the end of the year.

Graphs and charts show the fluctuation of income for the past eight years, starting on page 14.

G-N Policy

At a sales convention for western and southern divisions held in Chicago, Carl Leserman, vice president and general manmanager of Grand National, told delegates that the first 10 pictures in the three groups to be produced during the coming season will be sold on a percentage basis with the others being made available for a flat rental. During the convention it was announced that Edward Alperson, president of the company, had signed a distribution agreement with Associated British Distributors in London.

Details of the announcements made at the convention are reported on page 24.

WPAing Lewis Book

The Federal Theatre Division of the Works Progress Administration has announced plans for the simultaneous production in 15 cities, beginning October 20, of Sinclair Lewis' "It Can't Happen Here." Production of a screen version of the book, which depicts a Fascist regime in America, was abandoned last February by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer on the reported grounds that the film might be resented in Fascist countries in which it might be shown. Mr. Lewis at the time charged that the motion picture industry and Will H. Hays had "banned" the production.

The elaborate plans of the presentation of the stage play as detailed in the WPA announcement are outlined on page 28.

RKO Plan Delay Seen

Observers close to the status of the reorganization plan proposed for the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation are of the opinion that the plan itself cannot be completed before January 1, and that final approval may not be forthcoming before February or March. Discussions on an agreement for disposition of a $9,100,000 Rockefeller Center claim against the company will be resumed after Labor Day and are expected to continue for several weeks. Discussions with other creditors would then follow.

The present status and future plans of the reorganizaiton are discussed on page 16.

Salzburg Precedent

Each year thousands of music lovers from many lands go to Salzburg, Austria, to hear the works of the great composers played by famous musical organizations under direction of noted conductors. Under the guiding eye of Max Reinhardt the Salzburg Festival, as the institution is known, has become, since 1921, comparable, in terms of musical significance, to the Passion Play of Oberammergau. This year, for the first time, the motion picture has been accorded program recognition, "The Great Ziegfeld" being exhibited on August 2nd and "Romeo and Juliet" on August 9th.

Dr. Adolf Nichtenhauser's report of the event is published on page 41.

Europe Favors Singles

A survey of eighteen European countries completed by the International Film Chamber shows a pronounced swing away from the practice of double billing, with legislation in some instances reflecting the general trend in the direction of single-feature programs. Dualing of old product continues in some nations otherwise dedicated to a single-feature policy, a waning practice.

Details of the survey are reported by J. K. Rutenburg, Berlin correspondent, on page 30.

Plans to Ban Duals

Revival of plans to eliminate double features were reported on four fronts following publication two weeks ago of the results of a public poll conducted by Warner Brothers, in which over 725,000 voted four-to-one against the practice. Theatre owners in St. Louis, Indianapolis, New York and Akron are conferring on the possibility of abandoning dual bills. Difficulty in obtaining unanimous agreement is the chief obstacle.

Developments in the situation are outlined on page 16. ....

Cut the Politics

The rigid watch which exhibitors are keeping to prevent any suspicion of political partisanship from creeping into their theatres was exemplified by the decision of Real Neth, owner of a neighborhood circuit in Columbus, Ohio, to cut all political sequences out of newsreels shown in his houses on the ground that the showing of only one candidate in a reel might annoy patrons of the opposite conviction. The announcement by Mr. Neth comes simultaneously with reports that audience reaction to newsreels is already being employed by commentators for both parties.

Mr. Neth's announcements and other developments are reported on page 24.

Mussolini Agent

Carlo Roncoroni, holder of many prominent positions in the Fascist government of Italy, and president of Cines Studios, latest motion picture development outside Rome, arrived in New York this week on his way to Hollywood, where he will confer with Walter Wanger and Dr. A. H. Giannini, president of United Artists and international banker, on Italian production and legislation. While in Hollywood, Signor Roncoroni hopes to sign up producers, stars, directors and technicians to work in Italy.

Roadshow Revival

With announcement that "The Great Ziegfeld" would go into His Majesty's Theatre, Haymarket, instead of into its own Empire, MGM drew attention of the British trade to revival of a roadshow policy abandoned ten years ago and comment in the industry turned at once to possibly far-reaching effects of the move. Whether "Romeo and Juliet" would be handled in like manner was left an open question, to be answered by box office experience.

Bruce Allan discusses the matter fully in his article on page 29.

Counter-Amusement

First concrete plans for an institutional advertising campaign designed to offset expected competition during the political campaign this fall, have been announced by the Comerford circuit, owning houses in Pennsylvania and western New York. Chief factor in the drive will be a series of full-page newspaper advertisements in which outstanding product booked for the coming season will be announced. John Nolan, purchasing executive for the circuit, who made the announcement, is enthusiastic about prospects for the season.

Details of the plan and Mr. Nolan's hopes for the future are given on page 25.

Raising Prices

National Theatres, whose 400 theatres comprise Fox West Coast, Fox Midwest, Fox Wisconsin, Intermountain and Evergreen States, this week became the first national circuit to take a definite step toward increasing admission prices, even in face of the Federal and local admission taxes. Warners also revealed plans for such a move, but the matter is still being considered by circuit executives.

The National Theatres move, along with the admission increases in New York by Broadway operators as well as neighborhood theatres, is discussed in a story on page 13.

Heavy Man Wanted

Once upon a time the films were full of fat men. Now there's a job for one and none to take it. Julius Hagen is the producer and the play for which he needs an oversized performer is to be based upon the Tichborne case, famous in England, wherein the false claimant for a tremendous fortune was one of the biggest men in recorded history.

More about this and other aspects of the industry in England is reported by Bruce Allan on page 29.

Production Pauses

Production activity subsided from its recent peak last week with only six new pictures going into work while the shooting level dropped from 52 to 41. Naturally, cutting rooms were correspondingly busy. Paramount and Warner Brothers were leaders among the active companies, with eight pictures each before the cameras.

Details are on page 35.

Pictorial Preview

Designed with evident pains to stimulate box office response, "Cain and Mabel" is progressing toward studio completion with Marion Davies and Clark Gable at the head of a large cast. Hollywood comment makes much of the technical personnel, the timeliness of the story and other factors counted upon to attract and satisfy. H. C. Witwer is author and Lloyd Bacon is directing.

A pictorial preview of the picture by Gus McCarthy appears on pages 36-37.

Publicity Banned

Nashville newspapers have banned all "free" publicity on motion pictures, radio and other fields, because, they say, "the unwarranted amount of so-called publicity which our newspapers have been carrying is beginning to undermine reader confidence."

Double Indemnity

As Chicago awaits the inception of the double feature policy as general practice, Balaban and Katz, sponsoring the policy in its neighborhood houses, prepares to offset its effect downtown with long features.

The story is on page 78.

Tax Inquiry Pushed

Unearthing $13,811,807 in federal tax deficiencies, the United States Government will extend its investigation of such delinquencies, aiming at theatres along with others who are charged with failure to account properly for admission levies.

Details are on page 18.

"U" Party

The new Universal Pictures Corporation of the Cowdin-Cochrane-Rogers interests started formally on Thursday when three plane-loads of 42 directors and friends of the company left Newark Airport for Universal City, California, as the guests of J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board, and R. H. Cochrane, president, to attend the launching party Saturday night given by Charles R. Rogers, executive vice-president. George Jessel will be the master of ceremonies and among the guests will be some 300 fan and newspaper writers who cover the studios.

Receivership Report

A formal report of Milton C. Weisman, receiver of Fox Theatres corporation, has been filed in the federal court of New York, placing the receiver's valuation of the assets at $9,619,313. Among the assets listed are claims against William Fox for $7,500,000.

A complete story of the report is published on page 30.

Erpi Convenes

Delegates to the annual sales convention of Electrical Research Products, Inc., executives and employees, this week witnessed a demonstration of the new Mirrophonic sound reproduction apparatus. The convention was held at the Hotel Pierre, New York, and extended through five days.

Reel Trouble

Chicago exhibitors and distributors are faced with a special problem in the adoption of the new 2,000-foot reel. A local ordinance requires a two-inch clearance between reel and magazine. Pending possible but improbable revision of the city statute, various methods of surmounting the obstacle, none uniformly satisfactory, are under consideration.

William F. Crouch reports the complication on page 78.

Radio Study

Officials of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America are conducting a survey of box office receipts on pictures featuring players featured concurrently on radio advertising programs, with a view to determining definitely the direct effect of radio's use of screen talent on screen revenue. While it is made plain that the investigation is made in contemplation of action, no indication has been made as to what the nature of this action might be.

Preparedness

Newsreel cameramen are as peacefully inclined as most people, it must be presumed, but they are a notably forethoughted clan, too, and martial events of the present and immediate past are looked upon, however regretfully, as admirable preparation for whatever, if anything, is to come.

Price Boost Plans of Fox Groups Affect 400 Theatres; End of "Early Bird" Bargains Seen as Certain in New York

Despite admission price scale hardships imposed upon exhibitors by federal and local taxation, the first definite move in the country-wide trend toward increased admission prices was taken this week when National Theatres, the subsidiaries of which embrace Fox West Coast, Fox Midwest, Fox Wisconsin, Intermountain and Evergreen States Circuits, decided to raise price scales in the 400 theatres of these groups. New York theatres have been discussing the advisability of increasing admissions for some time, especially the elimination of "early bird" prices. New Jersey and Connecticut exhibitors also have admission increases in mind and Balaban and Katz in Chicago revealed Tuesday that the circuits prices will be raised.

Exhibitors surveys throughout the country, reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD of August 1, that the top admissions in most situations is purposely set at 40 cents because the 10 per cent Federal admission tax makes any increase beyond this figure subject to assessment, since if the price is increased from 40 to 45 cents, the amount of the increase goes for taxation. Therefore, to gain a five-cent increase in theatre net, the exhibitor is forced to double the amount of price increase over his previous 40-cent charge.

It was further shown that besides the federal impost which is levied in every State, there are 13 States that impose sales taxes which include admissions, five with taxes on gross receipts of theatres, and four States with straight admission taxes, all of these contributing toward keeping price scales down to depression levels.

The step by National Theatres will be the first by a major circuit toward raising price scales throughout the country, although Warner is studying such a move. It is expected this will be one of the principal topics to be discussed at the regional Fox-National meetings at Kansas City and Los Angeles starting late this week, and it is expected that when both meetings are ended, definite commitments to boost admission charges will have been made. Divisional and district operating heads and bookers, as well as sales executives of major distributing companies, will attend.

Favoring the move for National is Spyros Skouras, first vice president, who said in New York before leaving for Kansas City, that "an increase in admissions is necessary. Film entertainment is the only commodity in the world which has not risen along with price increases for the products of other industries."

Mr. Skouras, operating head of National Theatres, asserted that in northern California, Fox West Coast has an average admission price of 32½ cents, while in southern California the average charge is 32 cents. These figures include matinees and children's admissions, according to Mr. Skouras. Considering the average, "we charge the highest admission in the country," he said.

Unite on Price Rise

Meanwhile, the first meeting in New York of all Broadway theatre operators to discuss the abandonment of "early bird" prices and the adoption of a 5 p. m. evening admission price scale, which had been scheduled to be held in Atlantic City Sep- has been postponed indefinitely although indications definitely point to approval of the plan by all first- and second-run theatres.

Since the idea was first suggested some time ago, representatives of the Roxy and Strand have pledged support to the plan, starting September 4 and 5. The joining of these two theatres with the other exhibitors behind the move completes the total of Broadway houses.

With the opening of "Anthony Adverse" this Wednesday at the Strand, the theatre scheduled advances in prices to 40 cents for the hours from 9 a. m. to 2 p. m., an increase of 15 cents over the old scale; to 65 cents, from 2 p. m. to 6 p. m., and 85 cents, from 75 cents, thereafter.

The new scale disregards the Broadway plan of doing away with the matinee price changeover, but assurances have been made by an important executive of the circuit that the in-between charge will be dropped. Whether this will be done during or after the run of "Anthony Adverse," could not be learned.

A general increase, moreover, from five to 10 cents in admissions in certain Loew, RKO, Skouras and Fabian theatres in the metropolitan New York area is also being seriously considered by heads of the circuits. Loew's has several houses where an increase in evening prices is considered advisable. RKO raised the matinee and evening scales at the Hamilton theatre by five cents, and Lou Goldberg is planning to make a similar move at some of the East Side theatres under his management.

Representatives of the Loew and RKO circuits, and also Harry Brandt, speaking for the Independent Theatre Owners' Association, have stated that regardless of what the Broadway theatres do about the "early bird" and new evening admission scale, their neighborhood houses definitely would adopt the scheme. The thought generally is that now is the right time to make such a move, and that to pass it up now would be a serious mistake.

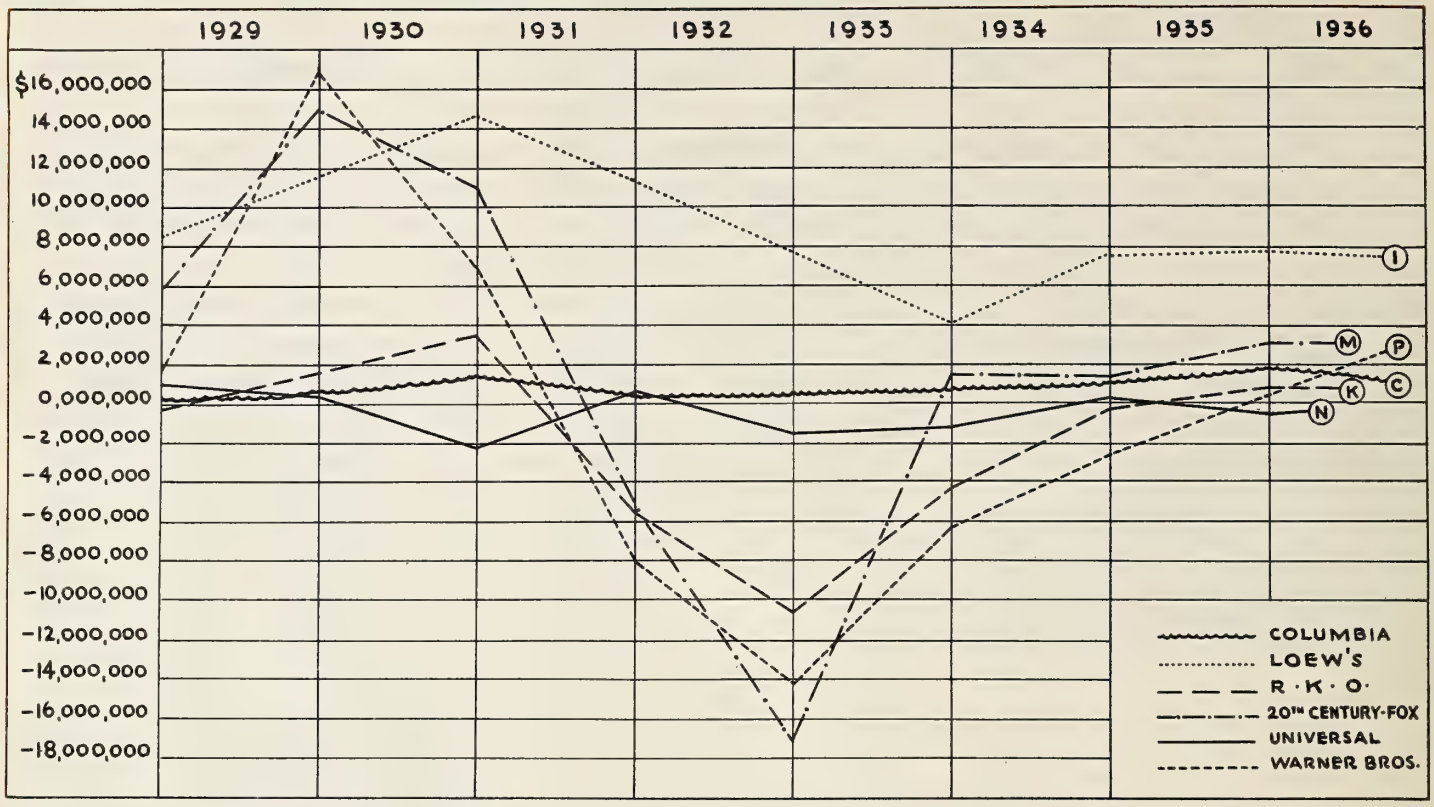
George Skouras has been thinking about raising prices at some of the Long Island group in his circuit, and indications are that the move will be made some time after Labor Day. Si Fabian has in mind a 10-cent increase for his Brooklyn houses, the increase to apply at both afternoon and evening performances.

Connecticut Advance in Fall

At New Haven this week, first-run operators met for a discussion of higher admission prices, to be effective with the new season. Whereas the three leading New Haven houses—Poli, Paramount and Roger Sherman—and corresponding "A" houses of the Poli, Mullin & Pinanski, and Warner circuits in Connecticut, now charge a 50-cent top, it is thought possible that "The Great Ziegfeld" or "The Gorgeous Hussy," which will open the Poli fall season, will raise the top to 60 cents.

"Anthony Adverse" is definitely scheduled to play at 60 cents in the Warner houses, beginning late this week, at New London and South Norwalk, and at other Connecticut key houses on September 10. These levels may be retained.

Moves to increase admissions in New Jersey will be one of the highlights at the Allied of New Jersey annual convention September 9th to 11th, Lee Newbury, president, declared this week.



"There has been some discussion of the move and the members feel something should be done about it," Mr. Newbury said. "There is a general movement on the part of the industry to attempt to increase prices. Whether this will be possible without decreasing attendance to the point of damaging box office receipts and whether the general quality of the product has improved sufficiently to warrant boosting admissions are two factors to be taken up at the sessions," he added.

JULY THEATRE TAXES TOTAL $1,568,487.42

A rise in motion picture theatre attendance and receipts even during the hot month of July is reflected in figures on admission taxes collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue at Washington, which shows that taxes for last month amounted to $1,568,487.42, compared with the $1,276,914.66 collected in the month of July last year, or an increase of more than 25 per cent this year.

This is regarded as in line with various estimates that business among theatres generally ranges anywhere from 10 to 35 per cent better than it was a year ago.

MOTION PICTURES "IN THE BLACK" FIRST TIME SINCE THE DEPRESSION

New Pictures and Steady Business Uptrend Boost Box Office Income from 10 to 35 Per Cent Over Last Year

Financial operations of virtually the whole motion picture industry are running well "in the black" for the first time since the depression. Recent optimistic predictions of both Wall Street and the motion picture managements now have definitely been realized in substantial net incomes practically throughout the entire film business.

Boosted by general business improvement and by the flood of outstanding product emanating from Hollywod, motion picture earnings show a progressive rise since the post-depression low point, touched in 1932.

Theatre business, reflecting gross admissions, is already more than 10 per cent ahead of last year in most situations, and is running ahead in many places by more than 35 per cent, according to Edward L. Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who made a countrywide survey.

Admission tax collections by the United States Government—always a barometer of business — continued in July and early August the upward trend which started in March, reaching in July the year's monthly high on a tax collection of $1,568,487.

July collections, the government reports, were $36,298 greater than the $1,532,189 collected on admission levies in June, and fully $291,575 above the $1,276,914 collected in July, 1935.

Receipts from the admissions tax during the first seven months of this year were approximately $1,000,000 above collections of the same period in 1935, total collections being $9,805,791, against $8,808,065 in 1935.

The report that motion picture operations are "in the black" came this week at the same time that government fiscal agents in Washington admitted that general business is likewise "out of the red" for the first time in seven years. Washington's fiscal experts declared that national income will exceed income paid out for the first time since the depression, total gross income for the country being anticipated at $60,000,000,000 for 1936, against $52,900,000,000 in 1935.

Income Rise Analyzed

The Wall Street Journal on Tuesday reported in New York that "the best box office reicpts in years are seen for movies.

The extent of the recovery in motion picture earning power is indicated in an analysis of reports of three leading unnamed companies which, according to a compilation by Standard Statistics, had a composite net income in 1929 of $29,520,000. This dropped to $19,620,000 in 1930 and to $4,530,000 in 1931. In 1932 the low was touched with a composite deficit of $7,390,000. The companies still were "in the red" in 1933 with a deficit of $3,320,000, but the comeback had started and in 1934 they had a composite net income of $5,190,000, while for 1935 the net income was $7,540,000.

An independent analysis of eight leading film and equipment companies shows a composite deficit of $1,420,000 for 1933 and net incomes of $6,940,000 and $10,730,000, respectively, for 1934 and 1935.

Gross and Net Incomes of Large Industry Units Show State of Financial Improvement; 1936 To Be Best in Years

With theatre attendance figures so far

this year running well ahead of 1935 and no early check in sight to the improvement in general business, final 1936 financial statements will show leading companies in their best earnings positions in several years.

Most recent financial statements of the large companies bear this out and reports for the final quarter should be even better in view of the seasonal box office pick-up in the fall.

The new exhibition year starts auspiciously with attendance records in most cases at, or very near, normal—another sign of the industry's definite comeback.

Outside conditions are highly favorable. Business activity this summer declined less than the usual seasonal amount, and material expansion is looked for in the fall.

Durable goods manufacturing, according to the Brookmire Service, rose 27.3 per cent. in the first half of 1936 over 1935 and promises further gains. A gain of 60.9 per cent. in private construction was reported.

The steel industry, one of the best barometers of the nation's prosperity, is operating at a new post-depression high. Corporations are daily issuing favorable earnings reports and increasing or resuming dividends. Employment is rising and, with it, consumer buying power that is being reflected at the box office.

Among the major film companies, Warner Brothers has staged one of the most impressive recoveries in earning power. From a record high net income of $17,271,805 in 1929, Warner earnings dropped sharply until 1932, when the company reported a net loss of $14,095,054. The next year the loss was reduced to $6,291,745, and in 1934 to $2,530,514. In 1935 a net income of $674,159 was reported, while net income for the 39 weeks ended May 30 was reported recently at $2,554,772, indicating the best year since 1930.

Earnings of Loew's, Inc., have taken a sharp spurt this year. For the 40 weeks ended June 4th, the company reported net income of $7,390,495 against a net of $7,579,744 for the full year ended August 31, 1935.

Twentieth Century-Fox has shown remarkable recovery since 1932 when, as Fox Film Corporation, it reported a net loss of $16,964,499. Net income for 1935 was $3,087,632. For the 26 weeks ended June 27, 1936, a net of $2,769,190 was reported. Among motion picture companies that managed to stay out of the "red" during the whole of the depression, although showing sharply curtailed profits, were Columbia Pictures, Consolidated Films, Eastman Kodak and Loew's. All their reports for 1936 thus far indicate a return to pre-depression earning power.

MOVE AGAINST DUALS IN FOUR TERRITORIES

Early Action Expected in St. Louis to End Double Featuring; Partial Elimination in Akron Plan

Moves against the continuance of double features were reported on four fronts this week, following publication two weeks ago of the results of a survey made by Warner Brothers in which a four-to-one vote by more than 725,000 of the public protested the practice. The poll and other recent agitation against dual bills is believed to have been instrumental in reviving plans in St. Louis, Indianapolis, New York and Akron for their abandonment.

Fred Wehrenberg, head of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, and Harry C. Arthur, Jr., head of the Fanchon & Marco circuit in St. Louis, have had several conferences on the possibility of eliminating the second feature. Mr. Arthur is reported to have promised that as soon as subsequent-run houses in his territory drop the practice F.&M. will co-operate.

It was expected that the subsequent-run exhibitors would agree to the elimination by Labor Day, but with no report from the independents, Mr. Arthur is going ahead with plans to play dual product in all downtown first- and second-run theatres where there are no stage presentations. The Ambassador and St. Louis will feature Fanchon and Marco stage shows, effective Labor Day. Mr. Wehrenberg is scheduled to call another meeting of his organization next week for a vote on the situation.

In Indianapolis 80 per cent of the exhibitors are said to have agreed to discontinue the practice. So far it has been found difficult to reach a unanimous agreement. Downtown first-run houses controlled by the major circuits have agreed to join in any move which would be approved by 100 per cent of the exhibitors in the territory. Discussions by leading independents in the territory are expected to be resumed after Labor Day.

The Independent Theatre Owners of America were scheduled to resume discussion of plans for the elimination of double bills at a meeting this week. The matter has been referred to the board of directors. Si Fabian, who operates the Strand, Paramount and Fox Theatres in Brooklyn, has declared that he is in favor of the elimination of double bills in the downtown section, but that he will make no move unless he is supported by competing circuits.

The Akron Independent Theatre Owners has named a committee to develop the details of the organization's proposed plan for "selective single features". The plan provides for the selection of certain pictures which are not to be played on a double-feature program in any theatre owned or operated by a member of the association. When the details have been completed, a meeting of the full membership will be called for ratification.

In Kansas City, out of 44 subsequent-runs that advertised, 29 double billed August 18 and 19; and 30 on August 20; and 36, or exactly nine-elevenths of the total, on Saturday, August 22, the number of theatres with doubles dropped back to 26, or 60 per cent, on Sunday, August 23.

On August 19 and 20, five doubled at 10 cents, and one at seven cents. Eight gave away something in addition to doubling. On August 20 there were five money give-aways in addition to doubles, and seven ran duals for 10 cents.

Revision of RKO Not to be Ready Before January 1

Completion of a reorganization plan for the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation before January 1 is regarded as unlikely by sources familiar with the present status of the company and with the work yet to be done.

An agreement on a basis for treatment of the $9,100,000 Rockefeller Center claim against RKO under a plan of reorganization, is conceded to be the most important single step which must be taken before progress toward completing a plan can be made. Discussions are scheduled to be resumed after Labor Day on the amount of new RKO securities the Rockefeller Center claim will be entitled to when and if it is finally allowed by the courts. It is estimated that at least four weeks of work will be required before any settlement is reached

If this phase of the problem is out of the way by mid-October, the proponents of the reorganization plan would then have to obtain the consent of numerous other unsecured creditors of the same class as Rockefeller Center, in addition to those of the more important RKO stockholders' committees. It is estimated that a minimum of two months would be required for this work and the final shaping of the plan for presentation to Federal court in New York would require additional weeks.

Even after presentation to the court, hearings and the writing of a decision would consume several months, it is pointed out, indicating that final approval may not be forthcoming before late February or March.

The Atlas Corporation, which holds about $11,000,000 of face amount of RKO securities and has an option to acquire from RCA a like amount, is taking the initiative in the reorganization proceedings and probably will be the chief factor in the consummation of the final plan. With RCA it dominates the secured creditors group, assuring the approval of the plan by that class of creditors.

following year the net dropped to $3,162,988. No report was issued for 1932, but the company's reorganization plan included an estimate of a loss for that year of approximately $21,000,000. It also was reported that combined net operating income of consolidated subsidiaries were $5,692,000 in 1933 and $4,530,000 in the first nine months of 1934.

For the year ended December 28, 1935, the company reported a net income, before special reserve, of $3,153,167. Its most recent statement, for the six months ended June 30, 1936, estimated net income at $242,922, against $2,268,000 in the first half of 1935.

Report 8 Per Cent Increase

Paramount theatre earnings are running approximately eight per cent. ahead of last year, an official of the company said the other day. Last year's earnings were well in the black with a gross income indicated by the company's annual financial report for 1935 of approximately $42,000,000 in grosses from theatre operations.

Paramount has an interest in a total of approximately 1,100 theatres, 950 of which are operated under management contracts outside of New York supervision. Of the 150 remaining, all of which are under New York supervision, 90 are operated under individual management contracts.

"Judging by the popular reception given the new feature films, the Autumn moving picture season is beginning as auspiciously as producers had hoped. Prospects are bright for the best year-end box office receipts in a number of years," observes the Wall Street Journal.

"There is also a general move throughout the industry to raise theatre admission prices where the traffic will bear it," said the Journal, adding, "Advances will be made at first only for outstanding films with large drawing power and with this as an entering wedge it is hoped to get a slightly higher scale all around.

ARCHITECT'S MODEL OF TEN-STAGE CINEMA CITY OUTSIDE ROME, where it is planned to produce 60 to 70 productions a year. The studio is now under construction, under the auspices of Premier Mussolini and Carlo Roncoroni. Walter Wanger is the first American producer who is to make use of the new studio, reports from Rome having it that he will start production in June, next year.

MUSSOLINI SENDS AGENT TO U. S. FOR AID FOR ITALIAN PRODUCTION

Roncoroni Here After Hollywood Players and Technicians to Aid Fascist Film Ambitions; Conferences with Giannini, Wanger

Carlo Roncoroni, member of the Italian National Committee of Corporations, president of the Fascist National Confederation of Builders, and a member of the Joint Executive of the Fascist Confederation of Industrials, as well as a member of his country's Chamber of Deputies, arrived in New York this week from Italy as the head of Cines, the Italian studio project near Rome sponsored by the government. He has already left for Hollywood, where he will endeavor to sign contracts with producers, stars and technicians to aid in the development of the new Fascist film center. He is accompanied by Signor Hans Bittman, chief technician of the Cines Studios.

In Hollywood, Signor Roncoroni will confer principally with Walter Wanger, who plans to produce at least one picture in Italy during the new season, and with Dr. A. H. Giannini, president of United Artists, who is a member of the company which was formed for Mr. Wanger's production activities at the Roman plant.

Silvano Balboni, a member of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio technical staff for several years, will leave Hollywood for Rome immediately after conferring with Signor Roncoroni. Mr. Balboni is being named to a strategic executive post in the Italian industry, it is learned, his position being described as "reorganizer and coordinator."

Signor Roncoroni made no comment, as he arrived on the Conte di Savoia, on the reported connection between his solicitation of American aid for Rome's ambitious plans for its film industry and the current discussions there of the probability of drastic new legislation affecting American distributors.

It is reported in New York from abroad that one of the proposals under consideration in Rome would limit the withdrawal from Italy of money by foreign concerns to 25 per cent of their earnings within the country. In addition, it is said, Rome would dictate the uses to which the remaining 75 per cent could be put.

It is assumed in New York that the seriousness of the new Italian legislation will probably be in proportion to the success of Signor Roncoroni's Hollywood mission.

In a formal statement issued by the Italian emissary, he said he hoped to develop in Hollywood "connections of collaboration which, no doubt, will prove economically advantageous to both countries."

"I would feel gratified," Signor Roncoroni added, "if my trip would result in the realization of a broader understanding in the cinema field between Italy and America."

U.S. TO PUSH PROBE OF TAX DEFICIENCIES

One-Tenth of the $13,811,807 Found Owing to Government Is Due on Theatre Admissions

Studies of federal tax returns which up to June 30th last disclosed $13,811,807 due the Government in miscellaneous delinquent taxes, ten per cent of which was due on theatre admission taxes, have barely scratched the surface, it was declared this week by Treasury officials at Washington.

The investigation of tax returns undertaken a year ago with funds provided by the Works Progress Administration will continue for some time, it was indicated, particularly as the Government can count on a net profit of some $13,000,000 from the work already accomplished.

Exhibitors throughout the country who have failed properly to account for admission taxes are receiving additional assessments and penalty notices from the Treasury Department as a result.

Admission tax deficiencies of $465,620 have been uncovered in New York City alone, it has been disclosed by the Internal Revenue Bureau, 90 per cent of which represents admission taxes. However, it was said by officials of the bureau, the greatest offenders are not the theatres but the night clubs and similar establishments, which have consistently quarreled with the Government over the proportion of their charges which should be attributed to entertainment as distinguished from food and drink.

Up to June 30th actual collections under admission assessments amounted to $3,411,476, and the total cost of this phase of the work was $1,798,981. The miscellaneous tax investigation was one of three WPA projects, the others covering income and alcohol taxes which will result in the recovery, respectively, of $1,578,296 and $1,004,707.

The miscellaneous tax assessments which so far have been made or recommended range from little more than $26,000 in Boston to nearly $7,000,000 in New York City, as follows:

San Francisco, $585,560; Los Angeles, $925,315; Chicago, $2,491,423; New Orleans, $72,360; Baltimore, $88,336; Washington, $58,792; Boston, $26,188; Detroit, $293,410; St. Paul and Minneapolis, $149,256; St. Louis, $138,691; Kansas City, $138,691; Newark, $409,646; Brooklyn, $158,874; New York, $6,862,590; Buffalo, $113,924; Cincinnati, $212,003; Cleveland, $112,758; Philadelphia, $211,032; Pittsburgh, $98,212; Seattle, $83,975; Milwaukee, $424,244.

An International Reference Book

The following editorial comment is from The Cimena, London, England:

"New issue to hand of a volume which has become at one and the same time a vade mecum and a sine qua non—both of which, in plain English, mean something I can't do without. I refer to the INTERNATIONAL MOTION PICTURE ALMANAC, yearly publication of Martin Quigley's organization, a reference book among reference books on the world's film trade.

"I seldom look for information in this highly valuable opus without finding it, and my 1935-36 copy is thumbed and dog eared. The new issue is an improvement on the others, for it's larger and has an even more comprehensive international section. A thoroughly worthy effort."

Erpi, RCA, Tobis Form Patent Pool

Patent rights granted in various countries under a definitive agreement reached by representatives of Electrical Research Products, Inc., RCA, Tobis-Klangfilm and other German sound film patent owners at a conference held in Zurich, Switzerland, will become non-exclusive after December 31, 1945, it was reported by Whitford Drake, Erpi vice president, on his return from Europe this week.

Under the agreement, which replaces the pact made in Paris in 1929 in letter form and never made formal, the German companies will get exclusive rights to Erpi and RCA patents in the Germanic countries and non-exclusive rights in other countries.

The discussions were scheduled to be resumed on Thursday of this week in Berlin, Mr. Drake said, and his place will be taken by one of the company's foreign representatives. Among unsettled points to be taken up at the Berlin gathering will be certain rights regarding patents of Companie Francaise Thomson Houston in France, British Thomson Houston in England and Phillips in Holland.

Another subject which came up at Zurich was the royalties on German pictures released in this country. Tobis-Klangfilm has asked a downward readjustment on the royalties paid to American companies. Mr. Drake said that nothing can be done until he confers with American producers.

Educational and Ace Close

Educational product will be released in the United Kingdom through Ace Films, Ltd., of London, under an arrangement completed between E. W. Hammons, Educational president, and Frank Green, Ace executive.

Split Talked of In Staff of U. S. A. T. & T. Probers

A rumored shake-up in the personnel of the Federal Communications Commission and a vaguely worded denial by Commissioner Paul A. Walker this week left Washington in doubt as to the future course of the Government's $1,150,000 investigation of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, and its affiliates, including those in the motion picture business.

In the reported reorganization, Samuel Becker, acting chief counsel for the investigation, was seen as either out of the picture entirely or subordinated as assistant to a new chief counsel, and John H. Beckley, chief accountant, also was slated for replacement.

Mr. Becker's tempestuous conduct of the hearings last spring, when he kept even the members of the commission in the dark much of the time as to what telephone officials he would call and what subjects he would explore; his refusal to permit A. T. & T. counsel to cross-examine witnesses, and his opposition to efforts of witnesses to give more than a "yes" or "no" answer to his questions, have aroused criticism and charges.

Out of Washington, when the report of a shake-up broke, Commissioner Walker issued a statement immediately upon his return, paying tribute to the "splendidly qualified and highly capable staff" conducting the investigation.

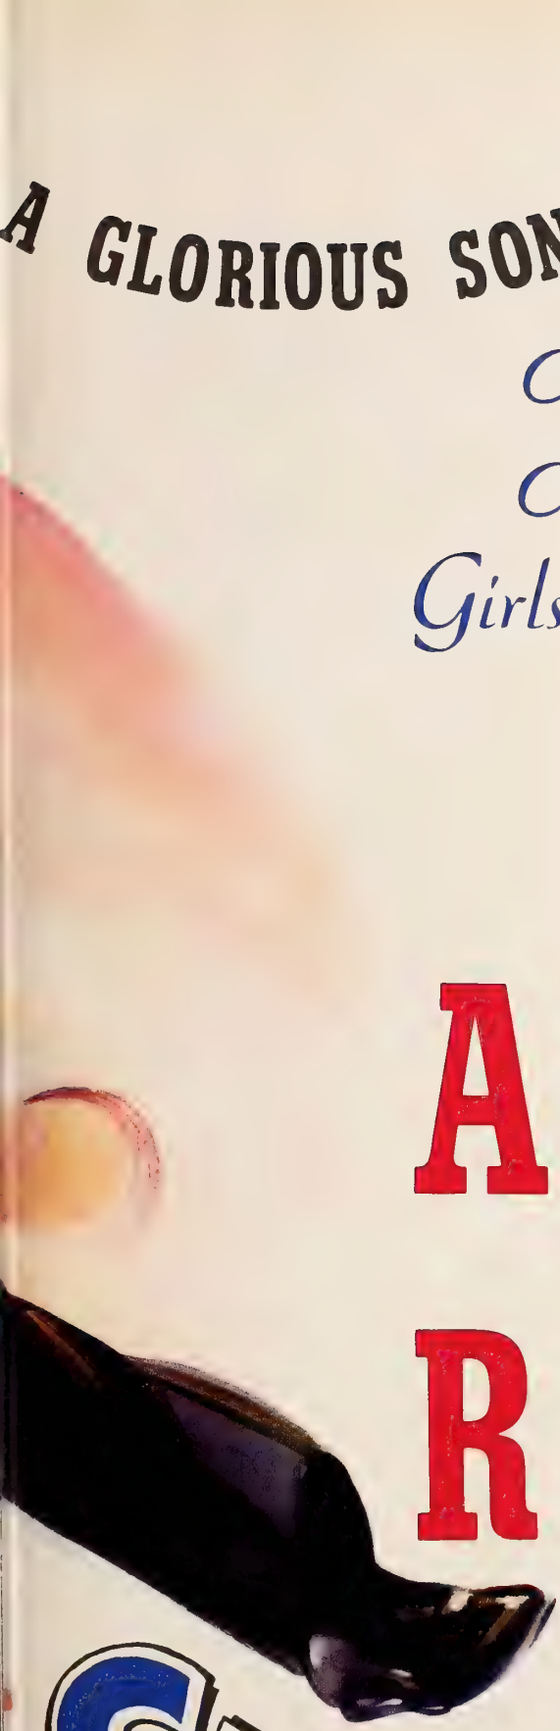
He did not deny the story, however,, in so many words, but contented himself with saying that "statements as to the purported supplanting as counsel of Samuel Becker, a brilliant lawyer of high integrity, and the forced resignation of John H. Bickley, chief accountant, and recognized as one of the very ablest accountants engaged in utility regulation, are wholly unauthorized and without any official sanction whatever."

Mr. Walker promised that the investigation will go forward "without any let-up" and promised that "its results will merit the commendation of telephone users and of all those sincerely interested in the protection of the public through utility regulation."

Philadelphia Unit Ready on Rental Fight

The United Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware will hold a meeting in Philadelphia September 3 to protest high rentals, said Lewen Pizor, president of the unit, who was in New York this week. In reply to a query, he declared the units which recently combined will retain their affiliation with the National Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association.

Consolidated Files Denial



An answer setting forth a general denial has been filed by Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., in connection with the suit brought by DuArt Laboratories in New York in which it is charged that Consolidated caused a breach of contract between the plaintiff and Universal. The answer also asked that the suit be dismissed.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

MR. DE MILLE'S FACE IS NOW RED

THE editors and publishers of Stage Magazine, pretending for the nonce, that we're in 1911, publish their August issue with the idea of recapturing the memories of 25 years ago in theatricals and Broadway night life.

Here again are Maude Adams as Chantecler, and Minnie Maddern Fiske as Mrs. Bumpstead-Leigh. There's Ethel Barrymore in "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire"—Ethel retired, again, the other day. Here, in 1911, music had its golden year; Caruso, Garden, Gluck and Farrar. It was the heyday of vaudeville, too, with Eva Tanguay, Nat Wills, Harry Houdini and Gertrude Hoffman, and the year of "Alexander's Ragtime Band." It was indeed a very prodigy of a year. A dear, dead, but gay and gallant year, and in all of the reckless activities of those After-Dark hours here was subtly prophesied the desperate days to be born in the great war to come.

The Stage editors use both picture and text, and idiom and fact, to uncover the dust of a quarter-century from the glamor of Broadway.

There is a letter from William Churchill DeMille, brother of Cecil Blount, and now very quiet as a motion picture director. Mr. DeMille, then of the stage, wrote from Merriewold Park, N. Y., to David Belasco, his employer, under date of July 25, 1911, reporting to the "boss" that "Men and Women," his second stage production for Belasco, looked better at the Washington tryout than Belasco's "Warrens of Virginia."

"President Taft was in a box, occupying a special chair big enough to accommodate his dignity," wrote William DeMille. "I got the thrill of my young life when he sent for me after the final curtain and told me how much he liked the play."

But it seems that at the end of the first act the audience did not respond immediately as Mr. DeMille had expected they would. So, "for almost a minute," he wrote, "I felt like a bridegroom at the altar who has just discovered he has forgotten to wear his pants."

DeMille then admits that the original title of the play—"The Machine"—"was rotten," and recalls how Belasco sent him home to think up another. "I still have the bright new dime you gave me for bringing that new title in," DeMille continued. (Editor's Note: A dime for a title—that was in the days before Samuel Goldwyn paid $65,000 for the title of "Children's Hour," and then did not use it.)

Jesse Lasky, in 1911, was running the Folies Bergere, combined theatre, restaurant and night club. The public did not respond to the idea of a theatre with tables instead of rows of seats, and so the place was closed in ignominious defeat for the young and ambitious Lasky.

"I saw Jesse Lasky the other day," continued the DeMille letter to Belasco. "You know he and Harry Harris have just lost their shirts in that Folies Bergere outfit. Jesse is going back into vaudeville and wanted me to produce a vaudeville operetta for him—all about old California. I was afraid it would interfere, so I turned over the job to Cecil, who tells me he and Lasky get along very well together." (That was at the beginning of Cecil's career. Now he's producing big "million dollar" pictures for Paramount.)

"Oh, by the way," DeMille added, "you remember that little girl, Mary Pickford, who played Betty in 'The Warrens of Virginia'? (on the stage for Belasco). I met her again a few weeks ago and the poor kid is actually thinking of taking up moving pictures seriously. She says she can make a fairly good living at it, but it does seem a shame. After all, she can't be more than 17 and I remember what faith you had in her future; that appealing personality of her's would go a long way in the theatre, and now she's throwing her whole career in the ash-can and burying herself in a cheap form of amusement which hasn't a single point that I can see to recommend it. There will never be any real money in those galloping tintypes and certainly no one can expect them to develop into anything which could, by the wildest stretch of imagination, be called art.

"I pleaded with her not to waste her professional life and the opportunity the stage gives her to be known to thousands of people, but she's rather a stubborn little thing for such a youngster and says she knows what she's doing.

"So I suppose we'll have to say goodbye to little Mary Pickford." She'll never be heard of again, and I feel terribly sorry for her."

That was in 1911.

Mr. Lasky, by the way, confessed to the press the other day, while visiting Quebec, that the reason why motion picture producers chew cigars and act "queerly" is because "it's a great business to go crazy in." Mr. Lasky only recently admitted that he has won and lost several fortunes—totaling millions—in his 23 years in the film industry.

"I've been producing movies since 1913," he told reporters in Quebec, "and sometimes it astonishes me that I still admit I'm Jesse Lasky and not Napoleon."

Theatre operating stands to influence the making of a precedent of wide interest in railroading.

Philip Davis, 29-year-old New York lawyer, has brought suit in municipal court against the New York Central Railroad to establish whether a person is entitled to a seat on a train for which he bought a ticket. He is asking $47.80 damages for having to stand on a train from Albany to New York City because there were no seats. Lawyer Davis charges there were 70 vacant seats in the Pullman cars and that the railroads should have permitted standees in the "coaches" to occupy them.

Mr. Davis got his idea for the action from the days when he was going to law school and at the same time was chief usher at the Strand theatre on Broadway, where, he explained, if excess tickets were sold at the box office, patrons were permitted to take the more expensive loge seats without extra charge. He decided to apply this logic in his present suit, contending that the railroad had plenty of time at Albany to see that not enough seats were available to handle the crowds boarding the train there and could have added an additional coach after accepting the standees' fare, but when they neglected to do so, they should have turned over the empty Pullman seats to the standees.

GRASSHOPPERS AND THE BOX OFFICE

FOR those Americans who do not live there we have found why Kansas is so good a show state. Kansans themselves are showmen and like to see how other showmen do their turn.

This is brought out in the discovery by the Topeka Daily Capital of "a Kansas farmer who is irrigating a small farm. He says that the grasshoppers have some system of communication. It is nearly as effective as the radio. His farm looks like an oasis in the desert, but he says that there are millions of grasshoppers that have come for miles to eat the vegetation produced by irrigation on his place. Asked how he knew these hoppers had traveled so many miles, he said that was easy. He had trapped dozens of hoppers whose feet were so tender that he hoppers made sounds of pain when they set foot on the ground.

Also he was able to locate the original habitation of the visiting hoppers by the color of their wings and the kind of sand they spit out. For example, he says that hoppers which came down from the Dakotas or southern Canada had light colored wings with brown spots and when they expectorated they emitted what is known as Dakota lime. Those who came from the region of the Homestead mine had gold-plated teeth and a sprinkle of gold dust on their wings. Those from Texas had thinner wings, stained by the waters of the Red River and the red clay taken on as they passed north through Oklahoma. He said that the Texas hoppers made a different kind of noise from that made by the Dakota and Canadian hoppers. The Texas hoppers had a sort of nasal twang and slurred their r's. He observed that they did not want to seem to fraternize with the northern hoppers.

The Capital editorial goes on to cite an old statute which provides that township trustees and city mayors may call out able-bodied males between 12 and 65 for the purpose of destroying locusts and migratory grasshoppers.

Independently of the Capital's investigations we find in the records that the grasshoppers have been plaguing communities since the biblical days of Egypt. The present plague in the midwest, the economic effects of which eventually make themselves felt on theatre box offices, has been preceded by many others that were considerably more serious. In 1856 and 1857 the pests even invaded houses and ate up shoes, curtains and cowhide boots. In 1877, the quantities of locusts were piled so high on railroad tracks that trains were delayed 10 days. Some $50,000,000 worth of grain was destroyed by locusts in 1874, working three to four inches deep, one standing atop the other, in the Mississippi valley.

As if the present hopper plague in the midwest were not bad enough, caterpillars, crickets, beetles, cutworms and even cinch bugs were joining in the festivities by the millions.

EXHIBITOR CUTS NEWSREELS TO KEEP POLITICAL BATTLE OUT OF THEATRES

Real Neth Adopts Policy of Eliminating Sequences; Report Pettijohn Supplied Roosevelt with Patron Reaction Charts

In spite of the neutrality of the screen, the newsreels, in their normal coverage of the Presidential campaign, are seen as a problem likely to grow more difficult as the weeks grow nearer November. The politicians, it appears, insist on referring to audience reaction to the appearance of the candidates on the screen, and one operator has accordingly gone so far as to cut out all political sequences from newsreels shown in his four theatres.

He is Real Neth, owner of the State, Cameo, Clinton and Eastern, neighborhood houses in Columbus, Ohio. In announcing his action, he said, "If the newsreels gave each political party an even break in each issue we probably would keep them in, but when a newsreel has a sequence showing only one candidate — it doesn't matter whether it is a Republican or a Democratic scene—it annoys some fans of the other party. So we decided to use the scissors on all political sequences."

Mr. Neth's announcement was quoted in a motion picture column written by William S. Cunningham in the Columbus Citizen and was followed by a general survey of the politico-newsreel situation in theatres all over the city. After quoting reactions at four theatres, the Arlington, Ritz, Grandview and Hudson, in which opinion seemed about evenly divided at all shows, Mr. Cunningham says that the four managers have orders from the owners to delete political scenes which they think are deliberately unfair to either party "as the owners don't intend to use their screens to take sides in this election."

There have been no deletions yet, and the managers have not received any complaints from patrons, he adds. Mr. Cunningham's story makes no mention of the widely reported and discussed contract recently entered into by the WPA and Pathe.

One Candidate a Reel

"Meanwhile the political pot in the downtown theatres seems to have settled down to a simmer," the columnist continues. "The newsreels have been showing only one candidate in each release, with Nominee Landon getting the biggest play because of his acceptance speech and his voting in the Kansas primary. Both events were noteworthy.

"However, President Roosevelt had the newsreels to himself in one Hearst Metrotone issue. It showed him on his vacation. That same issue, by the way, had the only trace of what was interpreted by some observers as political prejudice against the President. The Roosevelt picnic sequence was followed (after the insertion of one other scene) by shots of Pennsylvania people, labeled, if memory serves, 'hunger marchers,' and in the same issue Commentator Edwin C. Hill remarked during a style revue that there was 'no regimentation' for Miss America."

Ratings Not Possible

Scattered reports from other theatres were prefaced in the column by the statement that comparative ratings were impossible to obtain because both candidates did not appear on the same newsreel.

"President Roosevelt, however, seems to have received the greater applause on the basis of these observations," Mr. Cunningham concludes.

Charles Pettijohn, general counsel to the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, was reported last week to have given President Roosevelt charts and graphs showing the responses of 900 theatre audiences throughout the country to newsreels showing him and his Republican opponent, Governor Alf M. Landon.

Mr. Pettijohn refused to discuss his conference with the President, but it was reported that he left data showing that while Governor Landon's popularity had risen steadily after the Republican convention in Cleveland, President Roosevelt's curve of popular acclaim in motion picture theatres began to mount with his acceptance speech in Philadelphia and continued until he had gained back all lost ground.

DRUNKEN DRIVING SEQUENCE ATTACKED

J. J. Cavanaugh, general manager of the Chicago Motor Club, in a letter of protest to Will Hays and the motion picture industry, scathingly rebuked the producers of pictures which leave the impression of condoning scenes in which drunken and reckless driving is pictured.

Referring to a scene in the picture "Small Town Girl," which starred Robert Taylor and Janet Gaynor, Mr. Cavanaugh said in part:

"It is probable that these scenes could have been managed without the popular hero, Mr. Taylor, being shown actually driving a car while drunk. Properly looked upon, such an act is not to be considered a boyish prank. It is a thoroughly despicable act. It should not be glossed over. It should be represented in all its hideous reality.

"We emphatically protest against the continuation of such things in motion pictures and we hope that we shall have your cooperation in an effort to eliminate it, by bringing to bear the power of your office in the motion picture industry, upon the producers."

Sales Conference Held in Chicago By Grand National

The first 10 pictures in Grand National's three divisions of pictures to be produced during the coming year will be sold on a percentage basis with other groups being sold for a flat rental, Carl Leserman, vice president and general sales manager of the company, announced at the sales convention held in Chicago last week end for western and southern divisions. During the convention it was announced that Edward L. Alperson, president of the company, had signed a distribution contract with Associated British distributors in London. At the close of the meeting Mr. Leserman and Edward Finney, advertising and publicity director, left for the coast to confer with producers.

Pictures comprising the first group, according to Mr. Leserman, will vary according to territories, the rating to be flexible, as some exchanges want pictures of the second group in the first rank and vice versa. The executive added that selling will start at once.

Delegates at the convention were told that "Snow Covered Wagons," based on the Donner expedition into the far west, will be Grand National's top picture and will cost $1,000,000. It will be filmed in color against actual backgrounds.

Present at the meeting were Bradley H. Fish and Mel Hullin, San Francisco; Sam Berkowitz, Los Angeles; Joe Merrick, Seattle; Lon Fidler, Denver; Tom Tobin, St. Louis; Russel Borg, Kansas City; Lou Levy, Des Moines; Carl Reese, Omaha; Lou Patz, Milwaukee; Don Woods, Minneapolis; Ralph Peckham, Detroit, and Earl Silverman, Chicago.

The two year contract signed in London by Mr. Alperson calls for 34 pictures to be delivered by July 31, 1937, at the rate of three each month, the same ratio to be maintained during the second year of the contract. The Grand National president sailed for New York last Friday, taking with him two Associated British films for distribution, one of them being "The Lonely Road," with Clive Brook. It was indicated that Grand National plans to lend its producers to the British company for the production of films designed for distribution in the United States, but no contracts were signed in this connection.

During and after the Chicago meeting several changes and additions in the company's exchange line up were announced. The company has taken over Lon T. Fidler's Denver and Salt Lake City exchanges, formerly known as Distinctive Screen Attractions. Bill Shartin, manager of the Grand National exchange in Cleveland, announced the appointment of Bill Watmaugh and Orville Miller as salesmen.

CIRCUITS START AD CAMPAIGN TO OFFSET COMPETITION OF POLITICIANS

Comerford Group Opens Program of Newspaper Appeals in 19 Cities, Calling Attention to Pictures To Be Shown

Taking cognizance of warnings sounded from several sources within the industry that special showmanship efforts will be needed this fall to offset expected competition from the Presidential campaigners and the theatricals which they characteristically employ, the Comerford circuit in Pennsylvania has completed plans for an institutional advertising drive designed to attract and retain the confidence and patronage of the public. The Comerford interests therefore are the first national circuit to engage in the drive to defend the motion picture box office against any inroads from the radio, stage or motion picture entertainment that is expected to be used by the campaigners.

Last week Will H. Hays in Hollywood cited 40 outstanding productions as coming from the studios during the fall campaign season, and efforts will be expended in the industry to sell this group as the largest single unit of outstanding screen merchandise ever to come from Hollywood.

Other national circuits are understood to be also preparing the use of circuit-wide institutional campaigns during the sustained oratorical performance of the politicians.

Taking immediate action following warnings from several sources in the industry that special showmanship efforts will be needed this fall to offset expected competition from the political campaign, the Comerford circuit in Pennsylvania has already completed its plan for an institutional advertising drive. John Nolan, purchasing executive for the circuit, in announcing plans for the campaign, declared that improvement in the quality of product, especially marked in the last six months, "will insure results from any advertising." He said that many of the pictures scheduled for release in the next few months will practically sell themselves.

Full Page Ads for 19 Towns

The Comerford drive will be based on a series of full-page newspaper advertisements announcing product of the major companies to be exhibited during the coming season. They will be run in newspapers in 19 towns in Pennsylvania and western New York, the territory covered by the more than 100 theatres owned by the circuit. The first announcement, scheduled to run early in September, lists the 20th Century-Fox product booked for the season.

Although the series will specify the pictures to be shown, the main purpose of the drive, Mr. Nolan said, is to "sell" the Comerford name and to gain the patronage of those who at present attend the houses infrequently, if at all.

For this reason the announcements feature the signature of M. E. Comerford, chief executive of the circuit, under which is printed the following statement:

"The new show season is here! Summer swings toward Fall, and Hollywood's great motion picture studios are sending forth their new screen plays to entertain the people of the world. For more than 30 years Comerford theatres have shown the finest attractions that anyone—anywhere—has enjoyed. And what a grand new picture season these coming months will be! Hollywood has done itself proud. Brilliant stars, stirring stories, glorious music, gifted direction. You can look forward to the happiest hours you have ever spent in the theatre. M. E. Comerford has contracted for the top pictures of 1936-7. We are ready! Ready with clean, wholesome amusement for you, your family, your children. Ready with the beauty, safety, luxury of theatres offering restful relief from the cares and burdens of the day.

"As our opening salute, we announce an arrangement for showing the pictures of 20th Century-Fox Films. Thrilling, romantic screen journeys to a world where your dreams come true. Watch for these attractions at your Comerford theatre."

Following this are brief descriptions of "Ramona," "The Bowery Princess," "Sing, Baby, Sing," "Girls' Dormitory," "The Road to Glory," and "Ladies in Love." The theatres in the territory covered by each newspaper are listed at the bottom of the advertisements.

To Film School Openings

In addition to the newspaper campaign Mr. Nolan said that other plans have been made to keep the name of the circuit before the public. Tentative arrangements have been made to film the opening of schools in the various towns in September and to show these reels in the theatres. During the year, it is expected, similar events of local interest will be played up by the managers.

Mr. Nolan was enthusiastic about the quality and value of an amateur show schedule now being conducted by the circuit. Amateur nights are conducted in 12 houses, and the best acts are put together in a show which is then booked around the circuit. In some cases, the executive declared, the shows boost receipts by as much as 60 per cent. The schedule will be continued and enlarged during the fall.

Expressing great optimism for the immediate future, Mr. Nolan pointed out that the Comerford theatres are especially blessed in that they have maintained better than normal business without the aid of bank nights, give-a-ways of any kind, or double features.

"With the advent of the important pictures scheduled for the fall and with the expected results from our advertising campaign and from our other plans," he said, "we confidently believe that this season will be our best."

40 PICTURES CITED BY HAYS

Thirty-five outstanding productions were listed in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week, on page 24, as coming from Hollywood during the fall to offset any competition of the Presidential campaigners. In the original list, announced to the press in Hollywood by Will H. Hays, there were 40 such productions. The five additional titles included:

"The Plainsman," with Gary Cooper and Jean Arthur—Paramount; "The Prince and the Pauper," by Mark Twain — Warner Brothers; "The Plough and the Stars," with Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster and the Abbey Players—RKO Radio; "Ramona," in color, with Loretta Young and Don Ameche — 20th Century-Fox, and "Rembrandt," with Charles Laughton—Alexander Korda-United Artists.

Funeral Services Held for Hamlin, Trade Publisher

Funeral services for Tom Hamlin, publisher of Film Curb, who died last week in the Post Graduate Hospital, New York, were held last Sunday in the Friends' Church, Yorktown Heights, Westchester. The Rev. Harry D. Roberts officiated, and bearers were members of the local Volunteer Fire Department, of which Mr. Hamlin was a member. The services were attended by numerous prominent motion picture men. Burial was at Amawalk, N. Y.

Mr. Hamlin was born February 10, 1877, in Minneapolis, and received his education in the high school of that city. Following experience on newspapers, labor journals and the vaudeville stage, he published Amusements in Minneapolis, later joining the publicity department of the old First National company.

Subsequently Mr. Hamlin served on the editorial staff of the Motion Picture News and later was named managing editor of the Motion Picture Journal. He was president of the Associated Film Press.

Mrs. Hamlin, who has been associated with him for a number of years on Film Curb, will continue as publisher of the magazine.

GOVERNMENT TO STAGE "IT CAN'T HAPPEN HERE"

Debated "Fascist" Novel Being Dramatized for Production in Fifteen Cities by Federal Theatre Division of WPA

Sinclair Lewis' latest novel, "It Can't Happen Here," abandoned in production last February by the motion picture business on the alleged grounds that it would aggravate Fascist Italy and Germany, is nevertheless being made into a play for the public by the United States Government.

The book, which projects a Fascist regime in America, is being adapted for the stage by Mr. Lewis and a collaborator, John C. Moffitt, who is on leave of absence from the Paramount studios in Hollywood. National staging of the play is planned by the Federal Theatre Division of the Works Progress Administration, and on October 20 the curtain is scheduled to rise on productions in 15 cities.

Following announcement of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's decision not to produce a screen version of the book after a reputed $200,000 had been spent on scripts, casting and sets, Mr. Lewis charged that the film had been banned by Will H. Hays, head of the Motion Pictures Producers and Distributors of America, but this was denied by Mr. Hays. Louis B. Mayer, production chief for MGM, stated that the picture had been postponed for budgetary reasons. Later it was reported that the production was abandoned on the recommendation of the company's foreign department, which feared that all MGM pictures might be barred from Fascist countries if the film were released. If the flat fee of $50 per week royalty paid by the WPA Theatre for scripts is continued in this instance it is estimated that Mr. Lewis will receive $1,400 a week when the full complement of 28 companies get under way with the production.

The first productions under Federal sponsorship will be in Boston, Newark, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Denver, Chicago, New York, New Orleans, Cleveland, Dallas, Tacoma, Indianapolis, Syracuse, Detroit and either Jacksonville or Miami. The play may be produced later by 13 other companies.

In concluding arrangements with the WPA, Mr. Lewis said, "In spite of commercial offers for the dramatization of 'It Can't Happen Here,' I prefer to give to the Federal Theatre for two reasons: first, because of my tremendous enthusiasm for its work; and second, because I know I can depend on the Federal Theatre for a non-partisan point of view.

"I will give completely all of my time and work in aiding the casting, writing and rewriting with the New York City project, and will personally supervise the New York presentation."

Mr. Lewis will furnish the manuscript to the WPA Theatre directors in time for casting and rehearsals to begin in the 15 selected cities by September 7. There will be no single set of scenes or costume designs. Each company will act independently of the others, under a general co-ordinator of productions, Francis Bosworth, supervisor of play reading in the New York Play Bureau of the Federal project.

Each company will design its own sets and costumes to fit its own region, thus according the productions a dramatic direction keyed to the audiences of each section. Language or racial groups to be represented include Yiddish, English, German, Italian, Cuban and Negro.

Announcement of the plans said that Mr. Lewis and Mr. Moffitt are working at the novelist's summer home in Vermont to complete the conversion of "dramatic and stirring scenes of the novel into a new American play that faces the economic conditions of the days and challenges the future."

The book was a "best-seller" in 1935, and an intensive advertising campaign staged by its publishers immediately after Mr. Lewis broadcast his charges that the motion picture industry and Mr. Hays had "banned" the production, was reported to have increased its sales last Spring from 2,500 a week to 5,000.

Negotiations with the WPA were handled by Pat Duggan and Harold Matson, of Anne Watkins Bureau, Inc., literary agent for Mr. Lewis and Mr. Moffitt.

RCA Photophone Holds Conference

District and division managers of the RCA Photophone company met in Camden, N. J., this week to discuss sales policies and campaigns. Edwin M. Hartley, Photophone division head, and James E. Francis, Western manager, came east from the coast for the sessions.

Mr. Hartley announced that the West Coast Service Studios of New York; Burton Holmes Films of Chicago; the Metropolitan Motion Picture Company of Detroit, and the Chicago Film Laboratories, Inc., have contracted for conversion of their present RCA recording apparatus to permit utilization of RCA's new ultra-violet light process for both standard and push-pull sound track.

James Frank, Jr., assistant Photophone manager, and Frank P. Stephens, advertising, manager, attended the Camden meeting after demonstrating the RCA-Schwartzkopf criminal identification system before the Interstate Crime Commission Conference in Boston last week.

Paramount Wins Stay

An application of Paramount Pictures Corporation for an injunction against the Paramount Photos Company to restrain the latter from using the name Paramount was granted in the New York supreme court this week. Paramount Photos Company was alleged to have been taking sidewalk shots of pedestrians under the name of Paramount Movie Photos.

New Theatre Unit Headed by Pizor

Lewen Pizor, president of the former Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, has been elected president of the United Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, Inc., which combines the former group with the Independent Theatre Owners. Abe Sablosky was named first vice president; Mike Lessy, second vice president; Ben Amsterdam, treasurer; George P. Aarons, secretary; Ben Fertel, financial secretary, and Charles Segall, chairman of the board.

The board of directors will include Mr. Pizor, Mr. Sablosky, Ed Jeffries, Herman Coane, Ted Schlanger, Norman Lewis, Harry Waxman, Mike Egnal, William Hissner, Harry Fried, Dave Shapiro, Ben Shindler, David Barrist, Morris Wax, Leo Posel, Dave Milgram, Mr. Amsterdam, Mr. Segall and Mr. Fertel.

Demand Cut in Wages

Aaron Saperstein in Chicago this week declared that Allied is demanding a 10 per cent reduction in operators' salaries for the coming year. The operators, who are negotiating next year's contract, are asking for a 25 per cent increase. It is understood Allied is basing its demand on the contention that operators are overpaid at present, and that the new 2,000-foot reels will ease their work.

Warners Promote Greenberg

Fred Greenberg, former salesman of the Warner exchange at Kansas City, has been promoted to manager of the company's exchange at Indianapolis to succeed Oscar Kuschner.

MGM REVIVES ROADSHOW POLICY IN ENGLAND; "ZIEGFELD" IS FIRST

Trade Foresees Far-reaching Effect of Move; Ten Years Since Policy Was General; "Romeo and Juliet" Follows

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

"The Great Ziegfeld" and "Romeo and Juliet" will, it seems, have a bigger effect on British trade practice than any other two pictures which could be selected from the output of the last five years.

Announced officially that, due to its length, "Ziegfeld" would go into His Majesty's theatre, Haymarket, instead of to MGM's own Empire, this statement was later supplemented by Mr. Sam Eckman, Jr., with the news that the picture would be a road show attraction, probably at theatre prices, throughout the United Kingdom.

Playing three hours, "Ziegfeld" simply will not fit into the requirement of regular motion picture theatres that three programmes shall be played daily.

Former Policy Revived

At this time, the announcement that the picture is to tour as a solo attraction has caused less comment in Wardour Street than the fact that MGM, in hiring His Majesty's theatre, is reviving a policy which, it seemed, had become obsolete with the acquirement of shop-windows by the leading distributors.

Ten years or less ago, when a big picture arrived in London the distributors hired a West End theatre—favored were the old Empire, the London Pavilion, the Palace and the now demolished New Oxford—and put on a special season, which sometimes meant a big box-office loss but always a big booking gross due to its "West End success." Some of these pictures, such as "The Four Horsemen" and "Way Down East," made real money in the special theatre, of course.

It can be taken for granted that "Ziegfeld" also will draw the money in any theatre in which it is played. It will make history, anyway, as the first picture to play in His Majesty's, built as Her Majesty's in Victoria's reign and for many years the headquarters of Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree and his Shakespearean revivals. Tree, probably, would turn in his grave if he got the news that his "beautiful theatre" had gone movie, but the present owners are pulling their premises about quite a bit, apart from the disturbance caused by the installation of sound, in the expectation that the "Ziegfeld" season will be a long one.

Results to Dictate Course

Sharing this expectation, MGM let it be known that "Romeo and Juliet" might follow "Ziegfeld" at His Majesty's, but also that it might not. If the other picture played up to expectations, there would be a second West End legitimate house for Miss Shearer and Mr. Howard. Unofficial but intelligent anticipation at once got busy with the names of the Adelphi, the Piccadilly and the Palace—all wired.

Exhibitors, meanwhile, are wondering what "road showing" means exactly in this year of 1936. In most key cities the regular theatres, many of them famous, have completely disappeared. Closed, pulled down, converted to pictures or carrying on precariously with repertory, they were a sad lot in comparison with the modern, larger, cheaper, brighter motion picture houses around them. The Theatre Royal, in which Irving once played, is in many cases today referred to as just a dump.

To be taken for granted is that the two Metro big things will not play in this type of theatre. Equally certain, it seems, is that these pictures will not get the hundred per cent which seems waiting for them in every British city unless they play a large number of regular cinema houses.

Envisaged by exhibitors, therefore, is special exhibition of "Ziegfeld" and "Romeo" in cinemas, under a contract by which MGM and the theatre owners go into partnership, revising all regular house practices and prices for the occasion and abandoning all "continuous" arrangements in favor of a twice daily show at fixed times and possibly at theatre prices.

Edwin P. Kilroe, legal adviser of Twentieth Century-Fox and representative of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, is now in London on a mission relating to the proposed adherence of the United States to the Berne Convention on international copyright regulations.

He has had a conference with Mr. M. F. Lindlay, controller of the division of industrial properties and copyrights of the Board of Trade, and describes that conference as "very satisfactory."

Mr. Kilroe is continuing his survey in European countries next week and plans to visit Paris, Brussels, Berne and Vienna. He will also confer with officials of the Irish Free State.

Alfred Hitchcock finished "Sabotage" on August 7th with a big scene, on the Northolt exterior lot, of the destruction of a London omnibus in a bomb outrage, Oscar Homolka playing the anarchist.

The Jessie Matthews "Head Over Heels" will restart after the current two weeks holiday shut-down at the GB studios. Most of the picture is in the can, including the sound track of the songs, "May I Have the Next Romance?" "There's That Look in Your Eyes Again," "Head Over Heels in Love," and "Goshdarn." All of them were specially written by the Gordon and Revel team.

"O. H. M. S." is on location and will return to Northolt about August 19th. Grace Bradley has arrived for this British Army picture and John Mills has been added to the cast, in which Wallace Ford and Anna Lee are stars.

Julius Hagen of Twickenham Studios plans a film reconstructing the historical incidents of the "Tichborne Case," which in the middle of last century was a big legal sensation and which is still one of the greatest of British causes celébres.

Jefferson Fargeon is writing the film story and Maurice Elvey will direct, either at Twickenham or at the J. H. studios, Elstree.

Prime concern of the producer is to find an actor capable of interpreting the personality of the famous claimant to the Tichborne millions; he was one of the fattest men on record.

Australian scenes are called for, the pretender coming from Australia, but the big dramatic moment will, of course, be his unmasking in the Law Courts.

Herbert Wilcox finished shooting on the Jack Buchanan "This'll Make You Whistle" with exteriors at Hatfield Aerodrome and on the river at Weybridge.

Production of this picture has lasted just five weeks, despite many spectacular sequences. It goes temporarily into cold storage while the stage show is produced in London, and then will be released by General Film Distributors.

Paderewski rlayed his first scenes for the Lothar Mendes "Moonlight Sonata" at Denham this week (August 14). He has already made the sound track of several of his piano solos. Other members of the company, and about 50 extras, gave the famous pianist exactly the same sort of royal reception he is accustomed to in concert halls, and at the end of his scenes there was the unusual occurrence of enthusiastic applause.

Marie Tempest, great English stage star, has also made her first scenes. Barbara Greene and Charles Farrell are the juveniles in this Pall Mall production.

Karl Grune began shooting on the Schach-Trafalgar production of "Pagliacci" on Monday this week. It is Schach's first for United Artists and he is putting all he knows into it, including an all-star cast of singers and players: Tauber heads the first and among the latter are Steffi Duna, Arthur Margetson, Esmond Knight, Diana Napier and Arthur Chesney.

Screen play and continuity of this picture have been written by Monckton Hoffe and Roger Burford, and John Drinkwater has added lyrics.

EUROPEAN TREND AWAY FROM DOUBLE FEATURES

International Film Chamber Survey Discloses Tendency Is Toward Single Programs

by J. K. RUTENBERG
in Berlin

The International Film Chamber, which was formed in 1934 with the objective of attaining an international understanding in film matters, has just compiled an interesting review of the film situation in leading European countries.

This review reveals that the single feature bill is most widely used and that the double feature program is becoming more and more unpopular in the countries where it continues to prevail.

Out of the 18 countries that have been analyzed by the Film Chamber, ten have already turned definitely to the use of single-feature programs, while the remaining eight retain the double-feature policy in more or less favor.

Countries that have turned to the use of single feature programs entirely are Germany, Finland, Austria, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland. Denmark is preponderantly in favor of the single feature policy but a number of houses still double up old pictures. Yugoslavia and Chechoslovakia are subject to the same practice, although the dualing is even less prevalent proportionately.

Italy Subject to Regulation

Italy is more and more generally dedicated to the single-feature policy and doubling is practiced in only a few theatres, in which cases one film must already have been shown in the past season and it is prohibited to run shorts or other films when playing two features.

Countries still practicing the double feature policy, as of the date reported, regularly, are Belgium, Esthonia, France, Luxemburg, Poland, Spain, Catalonia and Hungary.

Out of a total of 24,585 theatres covered by the survey, only 9,431 houses are showing programs made up of two features, while 15,154 theatres have gone over to the single-feature policy altogether. Moreover, the exhibitor associations of Belgium, Catalonia, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Luxemburg and Poland have recently decided to adopt the single-feature policy as standard.

Hungary Goes to Single

Hungary joined the single-feature division after August 20th, when a new law goes into effect forbidding the use of two feature pictures on a single program. That will leave only about 4,000 theatres in the area covered by the survey practicing double billing. This is in sharp contrast to the condition prevailing for the past few years, when many despaired of every witnessing the return to single feature programs on the Continent.

The average length of the picture show is different in the various countries. Catalonia has the longest show, with 6,000 meters, and Italy the shortest, with 2,300 to 2,600 meters. Lengths permitted in the various countries in thousands of meters are:

Country	Meters
Belgium	3.300 to 5.000
Denmark	2.500 to 3.000
Germany	3.200 to 3.500
Estonia	3.000 to 3.300
Finland	2.800 to 3.000
France	4.200 to 5.000
Yugoslavia	2.600 to 3.000
Italy	2.300 to 2.600
Luxemburg	4.000 to 5.000
Austria	2.700 to ....
Norway	2.600 to 2.700
Poland	2.800 to ....
Sweden	2.500 to ....
Switzerland	3.800 to 4.000
Spain	3.500 to 4.000
Catalonia	3.000 to 6.000
Czechoslovaky	2.700 to 3.000
Hungary	3.000 to 5.500

In Germany the length of the program is limited to 3,200 meters without news reels and to 3,500 meters with news reels included. Beside the main film a second film may be shown which is inferior to 900 meters. The trend of Continental Europe is, therefore, directed to the single feature billing.

Sears Revises Warner Forces

Gradwell L. Sears, new general sales manager for Warners, has realigned the company's exchange structure, in order to bring about more centralized control by the district managers. There has been only one change in personnel. The new lineup, which is effective immediately, is as follows:

Robert Mochrie continues as assistant to Mr. Sears. Roy Haines, as eastern district manager, will have under his supervision New York, Albany, New Haven and Boston. Robert Smeltzer is mid-Atlantic district manager, with Washington and Philadelphia under him. Ben Kalmenson, former executive assistant to Harry Kalmine, Warner Theatres Pittsburgh zone manager, has been appointed central district manager in charge of Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit and Cincinnati.

Leo Blank is midwest district manager in charge of Chicago, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Omaha, Des Moines, St. Louis and Indianapolis. Fred Jack, southern district manager, will have Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Dallas, New Orleans, Memphis, Atlanta and Charlotte.

There are no changes in the territories under Jack Brower, far west district manager, who handles Denver, Los Angeles, Portland, Salt Lake City, San Francisco and Seattle.

Fox Theatre Assets Valued At $9,000,000

A formal report of Milton C. Weisman, receiver of Fox Theatres Corporation, covering the six months preceding June 30, 1936, has been filed in the federal court of New York. The assets are stated as $10,134,462. Liabilities are listed at the same figure. However, the receiver's valuation of the assets is placed at $9,619,313. One of the items in the assets is $7,500,000 as claims against William Fox. Mr. Weissman estimated that the provable items aggregate approximately $15,000,000 in claims against William Fox, but he explained that for present purposes the receiver has taken one-half of this sum. In the surplus account the receiver reports that the corporation is in the red for $34,467,804, most of which represents investments or advances to subsidiary companies, now worthless or uncollectable, usually charged off to surplus. There is one item for $28,693,904.

The loss for the receivership period from June 22, 1932, to June 20, 1936, is stated as $397,229.

The consolidated operating statement for six months ending Dec. 31, 1935, showed a loss of $76,714.

Cash on hand on June 30, 1936, was listed at $723,423. In the assets realized statement, there is shown a loss of $9,057,573. In the statement of liabilities liquidated the claims amount to $3,990,360. These were by the General Theatres Equipment, Inc., National Theatre Supply Co. and Fox Film Corp. Of these claims there is now in dispute the amount of $1,899,951. The statement of claims receivable, from the receiver of the Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., Skouras Theatres Corp., Bankers Trust Co. of Philadelphia, Bank of the United States and Roxy Theatres Corp. there is an amount of $96,223, but the receiver estimates that the collectable portions amount to $61,328. Investments on advances to wholly owned subsidiary companies are $1,310,191. The receiver reported that there was a loss of $2,784,896 on claims allowed. The estate account payable was $31,666. Claims not passed upon or decided amount to $8,479,981. The last item representing investments or advances to subsidiary companies now worthless or uncollectable is charged off to surplus to the amount of $28,693,904.

Meanwhile, Fox Estes Theatre Corporation, Fox New Mexico Theatre Corporation, Fox Ogden Theatre Corporation, Fox Big Horn Theatre Corporation, Fox Rainbow Theatre Corporation and Fox Lincoln Theatre Corporation have been incorporated at Dover, Delaware, to deal in photographic films of all kinds. Each listed capital of $1,000. Incorporators were R. J. Gorman, Charles N. Caldwell and Wellington Francisco, all of the United States Corporation, New York.

A representative of Hughes, Schurman and Dwight, attorneys for National Theatres, explained that the new companies have not been formed to take over new properties, but because of intercorporate reorganization which has been brought about by reason of the new revenue act.

BOOK REVIEW

MOVIE PARADE, by Paul Rotha: The Studio, Ltd., 44 Leicester Square, W.C. 2, London: The Studio Publications, Inc., 381 Fourth Avenue, New York. Engraved and printed in London. $3.50.

With a pictorial presentation comprehensive and acutely intelligent and an accompanying text, in spots biased by the cruel compulsion of words, with which he is most facile, Mr. Paul Rotha of London, author of the interesting and important "The Film Till Now," has brought forth "Movie Parade," a fascinating summary in reproductions of still pictures of what the screen has presented from Edwin S. Porter's "The Great Train Robbery" of 1903 to Mr. Alexander Korda's version of Mr. H. G. Well's "Things to Come" of the current season.

Mr. Rotha is an authority for England on what they are pleased to call the "documentary film," which might mean anything that is not fiction, but which most generally means in London and elsewhere what in the American vernacular is "just an industrial." "Documentary" in terms of film means either a picture made for advertising or one made for fun. Documentation is not a mass pastime. It may often be "theatre" but it is rarely "box office." The public is that way about it. Mr. Rotha is one of the several highly articulate young men of the period who are a bit irked by the slow progress of the motion picture in the directions of their various esoteric and special interests.

That has made it inevitable that being displeased with and therefore against the status quo of civilization, or should we say status quo ante, there is a turning to that most extensive repudiation of the heritage of yesterday and its arts, Moscow, inevitably Moscow. Like some of our so-called American commentators, Mr. Rotha sees the screen in full floration as an art under the emancipating influences of that Russia which has also liberated woman from the home and the cradle to give her the freedom of the machine gun and the tractor.

"Only, I believe," says Mr. Rotha, "in the Soviet Union might every field of cinema be developed to a degree of intellectual value fit to rank equal with the other arts."

It is inevitable, perhaps, certainly characteristic, that so many of our young critics should forget quite that "the other arts" are indeed distillations of ancient utilities and have become arts as they have been separated from their functions of utility. Now Mr. Rotha would have us believe that the Moscow movie, ever and emphatically an instrument of utility in the Red cause, a reversion as definite as history affords, represents art, and the only art attainment of the screen.

It really does not matter much, because as one leaves the region where utilities function and passes into those realms where arts are important one leaves the world of the people, the prevailing masses, pre-damned to their limitations of concept, fenced in against the greater adventures of the sensations of intellectualization by the high walls of their slight heritage and their vast mental inertia.

These young men who so clamour for the intelligent screen will some day maybe find that it is the instrument of the multitudes, whereas he who would have an intelligent audience must spend most of his time talking to himself.

But the political and international implications of Mr. Rotha's work are probably not nearly so important a part of his very competent performance as this screed would thus far tend to indicate. He has done an altogether exciting job, with many interesting and sound interpretive considerations of the meaning of what has been done by the camera. Surveying its pages one is impressed, too, with how much of significance has been done by persons entirely unaware of the doing. That, to be sure, is no indictment of the doers. The trilobite had his share in evolution and never knew it, without diminishing his contribution in the least.

Large labors of compilation are represented, and made the more significant by what must have been the eliminations. One is surprised a trifle that for all the other attentions they have in the book there seems to be nothing of Robert Flaherty's "Nanook of the North" and the Cooper-Shoedack "Grass," which, accidental as they were, cast long shadows of influence.

Better though than quibbling about omissions is to place emphasis on the magnificence of the job that has been done. No motion picture bookshelf holds the story until it includes "Movie Parade."

Kennedy Book On Roosevelt Out This Week

In a volume entitled "I'm For Roosevelt," on the bookstands this week, Joseph P. Kennedy, whose most recent of several motion picture activities was as special adviser to Paramount, and author of a considerably suppressed report on the corporation, declares his enthusiastic support of the New Deal administration and explains in detail.

Mr. Kennedy, former chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, defends the increase in the national debt under the present regime on the ground that per capita income has increased $190 a year from $290 in 1932 to $480 now. He predicts that if government expenditures do not exceed their average for the last three years, the present tax schedule will provide sufficient revenue to balance the budget, excluding the cost of the soldiers' bonus.

"I have no political ambitions for myself or for my children," says Mr. Kenndy, "and I put down these thoughts about our President, conscious only of my concern as a father for the future of his family and my anxiety as a citizen that the facts about the President's philosophy be not lost in a fog of unworthy emotion."

Statistics gathered by Mr. Kennedy during and after his term as SEC chairman are used by him to support his contention that the President's policies have brought the country out of bankruptcy.

"In the simple and direct language of the business man," the summary printed on the cover of the book declares, "Mr. Kennedy covers the problems of the national debt, unemployment and relief, money and devaluation, the agricultural situation, taxation, securities legislation and the other crucial questions of the day."

In elaborating his basic theme that the increase in the national debt is well within the limits of safety and is justified by the corresponding increase in per capita income, Mr. Kennedy estimates that the aggregate national income at the inception of the Roosevelt administration amounted to only $36,000,000,000 a year, as contrasted with $60,000,000,000 which he believes to be the current rate of the nation's earnings.

"This represents," he continues, "an increase of $24,000,000,000 over the national income at the inception of the Roosevelt administration. The per capita increase is approximately $190 per annum. No individual would be criticized if, as a result of borrowing $120 at the cost of $3 per year, he succeeded in raising his salary $190 per year. On this basis, should we condemn or commend the administration?"

Among the indices of the rise in national wealth, the author cites the advance of $42,000,000,000 in the market value of stocks and bonds listed on the New York Stock Exchange from the lowest levels of 1932. The book is published by Reynal & Hitchcock, Inc.

CANDIDATES FOR GLORY

On September 4th Paramount gives you Gary Cooper and Madeleine Carroll in "The General Died at Dawn." We do not have to tell you the popularity of those two stars. Yet, frankly, we believe, that their present box-office importance is as nothing compared with the glory which will be theirs when the world gets its first glimpse of them in this picture.

For Clifford Odets, America's most brilliant young playwright, has fashioned from Charles G. Booth's dynamic novel of war-torn China a screen play which will add a new and lasting lustre to their names. With twice the drive, the emotional impact of "Shanghai Express", this powerful story of a bold man's love for a beautiful woman has all the elements of true box-office importance.

Directed by Lewis Milestone, with a supporting cast which includes such veterans of success as William Frawley, Dudley Digges, Akim Tamiroff, Porter Hall, and J. M. Kerrigan, given a typical Paramount double A production, with a musical background by the sensational young composer, Werner Janssen, "The General Died at Dawn" is sure to be a triumph not only at the box-office but in the hearts and minds of the millions who will thrill to the sweep of its greatness.

FILMS AT SALZBURG FESTIVAL WIN PRESS, PUBLIC APPROVAL

by DR. ADOLF NICHTENHAUSER in Vienna

In the framework of the Salzburg Festivals the film was included for the first time this season when MGM showed "The Great Ziegfeld" as a European première at Salzburg on August 2, and, on August 9, "Romeo and Juliet" as a world première. On the day preceding each of these there was a show given to the international press. After the premières there was to be but one more performance of each film.

In order to understand the importance of these openings it is necessary to say a few explanatory words about the Salzburg Festivals. Salzburg, the birthplace of Mozart, is a rather small town, splendidly situated in a wide, hilly valley enclosed by high Alpine mountains. The Prince-Archbishops who were rulers of Salzburg till 1803 were powerful lords and great lovers of art. As soon as in the eleventh century they commenced with the building of the gigantic fortress, Hohensalzburg, visible in its height from almost every part of the town. In later centuries, especially in the seventeenth and eighteenth, a great number of magnificent churches, palaces, and, in the surroundings, plaisances were erected, in which the art of Austrian barock successfully mingled with that of Italy.

Reinhardt Staged "Everyman"

In 1920 Max Reinhardt had the idea to stage the old play of "Jedermann" (Everyman) in front of the Dome. This served as the nucleus of the Salzburg Festivals and thus gained the important place for them they are holding today. Musical performances have, however, superseded the dramatic ones since then.

In performances of the most famous operas, in concerts, in the recitals of religious music in the Dome, and in serenades, the most outstanding conductors and singers take a part, as Maestro Toscanini, Bruno Walter, Charles Kullmann, Mariano Stabile, and Lotte Lehmann.

The dramatic performances include "Jedermann" and Goethe's "Faust," the latter being also shown in the open air, at the foot of a rock onto which the settings are fitted.

From the end of July till the end of August the famous and less famous members of the world of music, stage and literature from all parts of the world meet here, together with an international, high-class public, among which the Americans and the English prevail.

Films Climax Big Day

The day of the press performance of "Romeo and Juliet" was a big day indeed, for on that same day the much looked forward to grandiose performance of "The Meistersinger von Nürnberg," conducted by Toscanini, took place. But still more agitated was the Sunday of the world première, when King Edward VIII visited Salzburg unexpectedly, and Italy's Crown Prince arrived, accompanied by representatives of the Austrian government. Thousands of people and cars crowded the streets all day and the traffic could certainly compete with Broadway.

Thus one can understand what the inclusion of the motion pictures must mean in this frame. The premières took place in a small movie house. At "The Great Ziegfeld" a very choice public included amongst others: The Salzburg State Government, Toscanini, Chaliapin and Stabile; at "Romeo and Juliet": The American Minister in Vienna, Mr. Messersmith; Max Reinhardt, and many famous European writers, artists and actors.

"Romeo and Juliet" impressed this critical public very deeply and was much applauded.

Max Reinhardt said to me: "I find the picture lovely, charming! The vital manner in which the film immediately plunges into the action is grand. The story is, as a whole, brilliantly told. Norma Shearer is wonderful. The film is excellent, it interests me extremely. The filming of Shakespeare's dramas is a problem that puzzles me greatly—a favorite idea of mine."

To the question if he himself would again film a Shakespearean play, Max Reinhardt replied: "Not for the moment. As soon as I have done with my work in Europe I shall go back to the States to direct 'Danton,' based on the play by Romain Rolland. I am now occupied with the scenario of that film."

"Romeo and Juliet" Praised by Max Reinhardt; "Great Ziegfeld" Given European Premiere; Sets Precedent

Difficulties Were Overcome

The fact that the film made its début at the Salzburg Festivals is due to the endeavors of Mr. Felix Bernstein, manager of the MGM Vienna branch. He had the idea and succeeded to realize this plan after difficult negotiations with the Salzburg State Government. (The Festivals are an official institution.) The echo this new introduction has found can be judged by the fact that the project of steady Film Festivals at Salzburg is being vividly discussed in Vienna.

The press comments on "Romeo and Juliet" are on the whole favorable here, although some objections are raised. "Shakespeare's drama was altogether perfectly filmed" (Neue Freie Presse). "The work George Cukor has done shows great achievement of taste" (Der Morgen). "The immortal work is brought so close to us as only the film is able to do it" (Die Stunde). "John Barrymore's Mercutio does the greatest justice to the piece" (Neues Wiener Journal).

Drama Festival Speaker Sees Revival of Stage

Hope for the legitimate theatre was seen by Barrett H. Clark, director of Play Service for the Dramatists Guild, in a speech given at the Mohawk Drama Festival at Union College, Schenectady. Mr. Clark urged the increasing development of the non-professional theatre as an outlet for the many young and promising playwrights. He named as the seven most original playwrights since 1920 Eugene O'Neill, Marc Connelly, Maxwell Anderson, George Kelly, Philip Barry, Sidney Howard and Paul Green.

NASHVILLE PAPERS BAN FREE FILM PUBLICITY

But Sunday Amusement Page Is Continued; Too Early to Judge Effect, Says Sudekam

Convinced that "the unwarranted amount of so-called publicity which our newspapers have been carrying is beginning to undermine reader confidence," the Nashville, Tenn., newspapers have entered into an agreement to reduce free publicity about motion pictures, radio and other subjects to an absolute minimum.

In a joint statement to all advertisers, the heads of The Nashville Banner and The Nashville Tennesseean, announced:

"In the mutual interests of you and ourselves, effective immediately, we have decided to discontinue publicity stories and pictures, except in those instances where the subject discussed is one of such public news interest that it would be deserving of comment in our newspapers without regard to advertising, or when such publicity is included in the charge for advertising."

Daily theatrical notices are eliminated entirely, but the Sunday theatrical page and picture layout are continuing. Nashville papers have never made much effort to print reviews of new pictures from day to day. Copy for the Sunday page has invariably been "puff" material supplied by the theatres.

Trade names are being eliminated from the radio columns, although, strangely, radio news and pictures have not been included in the publicity ban.

Nashville theatres apparently are not yet too disturbed by the situation. Tony Sudekum, president of the Crescent Amusement Company, largest middle Tennessee theatrical and motion picture enterprise, states: "The usual publicity is given on Sunday, with a page or more devoted to the coming week's programs, with pictures in a layout. The ruling applies to the week-day stories, but where there is a picture or program of special interest, the exception is made, as was the case with the review on 'The Green Pastures.' As the ruling has not been in effect a month, it is too early to judge of its bearing on our exploitation campaigns."

Nashville's theatres affected by the ban include the Belmont, Bijou, Capitol, Elite, Fifth Avenue, Gay, Knickerbocker, Lincoln, Paramount, Princess, Rex, Vendome and Woodland. These houses, catering to Nashville's 137,000 inhabitants, have depended considerably on the two newspapers to reach the 73,260 subscribers of the Banner and the 72,191 subscribers of the Tennesseean.

36 YEARS AN EXHIBITOR, IS OWN PROJECTIONIST

John Carneris, owner of the Virginia theatre in Bakersfield, California, who is starting his 36th year as a west coast exhibitor, acts as his own projectionist, with his son, Eugene, handling the front of the house.

Mr. Carneris came to this country from Greece in 1890 and started operating nickelodeons in the west in 1900.

Fox Testifies To $1,000,000 Made in Gifts

After attempts were made by counsel for creditors to trace two $200,000 checks, the hearings in the voluntary bankruptcy action brought by William Fox, the former motion picture magnate, in Atlantic City, were adjourned and the scene shifted to another courtroom, where a California corporation is trying to set aside the gift by Mr. Fox of his estate at Woodmere, L. I., to his wife, Eva, who later took the stand.

Within a short time after selling his Fox Film and Fox Theatre holdings for $15,000,000 in 1930, Mr. Fox made gifts totalling more than $1,000,000, but in all his life, he testified, he never made a bond on a property and only once did he ever sign as guarantor on a mortgage. The answers were for use in the suit which was brought by the Capital Company of California, and were not directly related to the bankruptcy proceedings.

The gift of the Woodmere place was made on April 14, 1930, which, according to counsel, was just a week after Mr. Fox received the $15,000,000 for his holdings. Mr. Fox swore that so far as he could recall he paid off all debts at once, including $1,925,000 in bank loans, and by the end of that week was entirely solvent.

Cites Gifts Made

Mr. Fox promised to supply a complete statement of all the gifts made. Besides the state, he listed, offhand, $100,000 to Benjamin Reass, one of his New York attorneys; $100,000 to Claudius Huston, "personally and not in his capacity as Republican National Committee chairman"; $100,000 to James Francis Burke, Pittsburgh lawyer; $200,000 to Jack Leo, a relative, and $100,000 to Joseph Leo.

Before the bankruptcy hearings adjourned last week, Herbert Leitsteen, bookkeeper for Mr. Fox, was ordered by Federal Referee Robert E. Steedle to prepare a financial statement of Fox assets and liabilities as of January 1, 1930. This was requested by creditors' counsel after they had questioned Mr. Leitsteen on some earlier testimony and won an unqualified assertion that such a statement could be made up entirely from the Fox books with "some little memorandum."

Mr. Leitsteen denied any recollection of the whereabouts of the memoranda, but said that he knew that he had them. Walter Hanstein, for the creditors, reported that "no statements with the forwarding balances of William Fox have been turned over to the trustee."

Counsel Charges Evasion

David Katz of New York, for the creditors, protested that "Leitsteen has been evasive and always left an opening. The time should come when they can say, 'We have all the records.'"

Previously counsel spent a whole day questioning Mr. Leitsteen concerning two $200,000 checks. One was drawn by Mr. Fox to his order and against his own bank account in April, 1930. The bookkeeper said he could not recall what had been done with the money. He was then questioned about a check drawn by Mr. Fox to his own order on January 24, 1932, and voided on the same day. He was unable to remember anything about this transaction. He also was unable to remember the reason for the drawing of a $200,000 check by the All-Continent Corporation, which, when cashed, bore the endorsement of an attorney employed by Mr. Fox.

Mr. Leitsteen said he could not remember whether or not Mr. Fox gave his daughter, Mrs. Belle Schwartz, $200,000 at about this time.

CHILDREN PREFER FILMS TO RADIO

Going to the movies is the favorite recreation for most boys and girls, a recent survey of the recreational preferences of children disclosed. The survey was conducted by the Columbia University Press and ascertained the preferences of 4,345 children, aged 10 to 13, in New York City.

Attendance at motion picture theatres, reading the comics and listening to an orchestra on the stage, all outranked listening to programs on the air in the juveniles' likings.

Mention of Bank Nights In Advertising Banned

John A. Fleissner, postmaster at Milwaukee, has advised newspapers that "Bank Night" is considered a lottery under postal laws regardless of decisions in the courts to the contrary.

Breach of contract action has been brought against Lowell Wilhelm, manager, and the Nivoli Theatre Corporation, operator of the Logan theatre in Noblesville, Ind., by Mrs. Bessie Stewart who claims that she was not given a $40 award when her name was called as a "Bank Night" winner, although she was in the theatre at the time.

A point in the "Bank Night" controversy in progress in Salem, Ore., was won by Carl A. Porter, manager of Warner's Elsinore, when he gained permission to operate until September 21. Mr. Porter claimed that the game represented advertising and did not constitute a lottery. The test case is being watched by all Oregon theatres.

Musical Comedy

This new film featuring the already highly established team of Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, which has danced, clowned and sang its rhythmical way into the respected annals of box office history, as evidenced by every national exhibitor poll yet conducted, serves definitely to increase the team's prestige as a top money combination.

For sophistication, new and catchy music, artistically impressionistic dancing, sparkling comedy and dialogue, handsomely contrived settings and general excellence of production this musical unfolds with a synchronized rhythm surpassing all Astaire-Rogers vehicles to date.

Exhibitors have everything to sell. This is undoubtedly the picture showmen have been waiting for to compare favorably with "Top Hat." It is fine mass entertainment.

Astaire and Rogers are new, fresh and invigorating in sophisticated dance ensemble and romantic interlude. Victor Moore brings a different and laughable characterization to the screen in his comic role as a skillful maestro of legerdemain. Helen Broderick as his teammate in comedy gives her usual standout performance. Eric Blore as the gracious dance master appears briefly, but garners a substantial number of laughs which leave the audience wanting more. These names provide added incentive for smart showmanship.

George Stevens' direction is the very essence of rhythm and smoothness carried off in light vein and swift tempo. All performances suggest ease and confidence of characterization and are of a high calibre.

Reviewed at the Pantages theatre, Los Angeles, regarded as a "tough" preview house, where the picture drew rounds of enthusiastic applause from the entire audience.

I'd Give My Life

(Paramount)

Drama

This is a direct picturization of "The Noose," by Willard Mack and H. H. Van Loan, which enjoyed such vast popularity as a stage play several years ago as to become the often unacknowledged forebear of many motion pictures having as their big situation that of the doomed man on the gallows, the governor in his mansion pondering the matter of a pardon, with relatives, friends and the audience pleading for the murderer's life. It was inevitable that not all of these derivatives should be as soundly constructed and logically developed as the original. That is beside the present case. This is the original.

In the picture as in the stage play suspense is carefully, methodically built up. There is at no time a question as to the convicted man's guilt. Only his justification is disputed and only he and the audience are in full possession of the facts pertaining to it. Out of this dramatic situation the picture draws its strength.

Tom Brown is cast as the young man sentenced to death for the unexplained murder of a racketeer, foe of the newly elected governor. Sir Guy Standing plays the governor, whose wife's sympathy has been attracted to the boy's case. The boy is determined to die rather than reveal that he killed the racketeer because he had discovered himself to be the gangster's son by a former marriage to the governor's wife and that the dead man had planned to use the fact against the chief executive. The boy's sweetheart, played by Frances Drake, and members of the governor's family work out the conclusion, which is of satisfying character.

36 Hours to Kill

(20th Century - Fox)

Comedy-Drama

Here they are again, the gangster, the G-man and the reporter, but here, too, is effective narration, stimulating production, smooth performance and, consequently, sound, brisk entertainment. Here, therefore, is not merely another gangster picture, or another G-man picture if you prefer that term, but a fast, exhilarating bit of fiction protrayed by players who fit their roles and directed by a man who knows how to tell a story.

Lacking names that are celebrated for self-sustaining box office magnetism, the production suggests exploitation bringing out the constituent story factors and containing definite assertion of entertainment values. Speed, vigor and melodrama, without sacrifice of plausibility, may be relied upon.

The story centers about Duke Benson, who becomes Public Enemy No. 1, and his efforts to collect a sweepstakes prize without revealing his identity. A girl reporter, a G-man, a sleeping car porter and the gangster's confederate and sweetheart figure in incidents of a 36-hour train-ride marked by many complications. The reporter and the detective contract a matrimonial attachment at the close of the picture, which ends both satisfactorily and logically.

Don't Turn 'Em Loose

(RKO Radio)

Modern Melodrama

Following closely in the wake of news headlines and editorial comment condemning weaknesses in parole systems throughout the country, this picture is strong, dramatic entertainment simultaneously striking bitterly at the relenting parole boards which allow habitual criminals to drift easily from behind prison bars to a lawless life in the open. Certain improbabilities of the story are successfully overcome by direction and characterization which mould the tale into a compact and highly dramatic chronicle of present-day life. Sometimes harsh and straight from the shoulder, the film serves its purpose and has direct appeal at the box-office to audiences who like "raw meat" entertainment.

Showmen have a timely opportunity to cash in on exploitation through current blasts of the nation's press against the parole system. This one, however, is definitely for adult consumption.

The story, adapted by Harry Segall and Ferdinand Reyher from the Thomas Walsh yarn, "Homecoming," has to do with Bruce Cabot as an underworld rat who kills and loots for the thrill that's in it. His paroles come easy. Preying on the sympathies of a parole board, he gets out of jail through various plants, such as having a fake wife and baby plead his cause. Meantime he lives a Jekyll and Hyde existence with his family, seeing them only when he is not allegedly in South America on business.

All goes smooth until Lewis Stone, Cabot's father, is appointed to the parole board. A dramatic climax is reached when Stone sides in with the parole board in releasing Cabot in order to offer protection to his family's name as well as to provide a harmonious setting for the marriage of his daughter, Betty Grable, to a young banker, John Arledge. James Gleason, a hard boiled cop, finally arranges a plant and Cabot is caught in the act of looting a safe. The dramatic highpoint is the killing of Cabot by his own father, Stone, who by the act eases his conscious for letting the rat out on parole.

Performances of the principals are highly commendable. Ben Stoloff has directed with intelligence, never losing a dramatic punch where one was to be achieved.

The principal asset in selling this one is offered in newspaper headline and editorial treatment of the subject. In addition there is a genuine family twist. Vigorous, timely drama is the showmen's forte.

Reviewed at the RKO Hillstreet theatre, first run house, where it followed "Mary of Scotland," and the audience was apparently gripped by the stark drama and obvious frankness of the picture. WATT, Hollywood.

King of the Royal Mounted

(20th Century - Fox)

Northwest Drama

Where outdoor action films are looked upon with high favor from a box office receipt angle this picture is qualified to do good business with its generous supply of melodrama. Beautiful mountain scenery excellently photographed by the camera is a selling angle not to be overlooked by the exhibitor for lobby advertising. The title speaks for itself and should be a dependable factor for action advocates and the youngsters.

The story has no particularly unusual twists and features the mountie getting his man in the routine manner. However, author Zane Grey's name is a key selling point.

Robert Kent is the sergeant of the Royal Mounted who takes a continual ribbing from his barracks mates because of the lack of excitement in their part of the north woods. Things start popping when Rosalind Keith arrives on the scene accompanied by her attorney, Alan Dinehart. A mining claim shared by Miss Keith's father with Frank McGlynn, Sr., is the point in question. McGlynn wants to give Miss Keith her rightful due, but Dinehart is bickering for an outside settlement under threat of court action so he can make off with a major portion of the proceeds. The climax features a scuffle beween Dinehart and McGlynn in which McGlynn is killed.

Meanwhile, romantic aspirations are evident between Kent and Miss Keith. Dinehart finally talks Miss Keith into accompanying him in a getaway and a chase ensues across mountain tops and precipices with Kent getting his man.

Draegerman Courage

(Warner)

Drama

Warners have come to the foreground once more with a timely, dramatic tale adapted from an incident bannerlined by the country's daily press several months ago. The story tells of the heroic work of draegermen, who form the rescue squads in the event of mine disasters, and parallels the tragic entombment of three men in the recent Nova Scotia mine cave-in.

Lacking in strong draw names, with the exception of possibly Jean Muir, the picture relies upon revival of the yarn's news value for exploitation purposes. The story is good average entertainment, contains a healthy punch and is neatly balanced by restrained characterization and direction which keeps it well above the melodramatic.

Barton MacLane is the hero of the piece, portraying an heroic draegerman who fights with his boss, Robert Barrat, continually for necessary mine improvements. He is enamored of Jean Muir, daughter of the kindly mining district doctor, Henry O'Neill. Two mine rescues are effected in the film, with the last one involving MacLane's enemy, Barrat, who has conserved on reinforcement materials to reinforce his pocketbook. Here the film reaches its apex with the dramatic rescue of Barrat and his companions from the mine by MacLane.

The romantic thread is subordinated to strong two-fisted action.

The Texas Rangers

(Paramount)

Western Drama

This film chronicles the growth of a state from a wild, reckless and barbaric frontier to a law-abiding citizenship. Heart interest, comedy and drama are handled in a style which lifts the picture far above the common run of western vehicles and gives it general audience appeal in deluxe houses as well as neighborhood situations. In addition there is the name power of Fred MacMurray, Jack Oakie and Jean Parker. The pictorial content of "Texas Rangers," however, holds major attraction for the male contingent, due to the rough and hard nature of the historical theme.

Action and pathos to a great degree softens the rough edge of the film, which revolves around MacMurray and Oakie, two renegades, who, in order to serve their own purposes, sever relations with their partner in crime, Lloyd Nolan, and join up with the Texas Rangers. The weblike romance is woven between MacMurray and Jean Parker, daughter of Edward Ellis, a southern major, but becomes subordinant to the ridin', shootin' and fightin'.

The plot gains momentum when MacMurray and Oakie yield to the lure and color of the Texas Rangers, leaving Nolan to play a lone outlaw game, although the three continue to retain a strong bond of friendship despite being pitted against one another. Climatic impact is achieved with the death of both Oakie and Nolan. The death of Oakie, who throughout plays a superb blend of care-free comedy and pathos, is a shock to audiences and failed to have a favorable reaction on preview patrons.

Director King Vidor has drawn a vivid picture of the trying times of the period, at the same time combining fictional entertainment far reaching in appeal.

All cast performances are of the high calibre, including those of Bennie Bartlett, Frank Shannon, Frank Cordell, Richard Carle, Jed Prouty, Fred Kohler, Sr., and George Hayes. The photography of Edward Cronjager is effectively striking for beauty and story continuity.

An adequate song plug may be found in "I Can't Play My Banjo with Susanna on My Knee," sung by Oakie.

The picture fits in nicely with the current publicity on the Texas Centennial. The cast names and the robust plot of the feature, plus historical interest, are additional selling angles for showmen.

Previewed at the Fox Wilshire Theatre, Beverly Hills. This is a second run house. Played against "Suzy" with favorable results save for the Oakie death scene, which was greeted with definitely unfavorable reaction from the customers. WATT, Hollywood.

Lady Be Careful

(Paramount)

Comedy Romance

This screen adaptation of the stage play "Sailor Beware" is a workmanlike job in providing amusing entertainment for patrons and generous showmanship potentialities for exhibitors. Intelligent story preparation, understanding, direction and good acting blend to form gay, airy and exciting youthful comedy romance. Keyed to the pitch of engaging dialogue and smartly premised situations, the film moves speedily and with a gusto that seems certain to provoke much popular enthusiasm. Production quality being of much higher caliber than ordinarily expected in a picture that boasts no super attractive cast names, the motivating story nevertheless is given unique appeal by credible individual and collective performances.

Localed at a West Coast naval base and in Panama, sailors of the U. S. Fleet and a Canal Zone night club queen are the personalities dealt with. Though many personalities appear, Lew Ayers, Mary Carlisle, Larry Crabbe and Benny Baker are the central figures.

Early sequences establish the comedy character. Ayers is dubbed Dud because he's too bashful to get across with the ladies, while Crabbe is the fleet's heartbreaker. A situation is precipitated whereby bashful Ayers is made to appeal to the darling of a bevy of debutantes and consequently the rival of Crabbe for the title of heartbreaker. As the fleet moves off for Panama, Baker makes a bet with Crabbe that Ayers can make the romantic grade with Billie Jackson, pride of Panama, termed "Stonewall" because for years she has turned down all sailors and particularly marine Crabbe.

Fearful of what may happen to him at the hands of Billie, but more fearful of the wrath of his supporters in the bet if he fails, unwilling Ayers is forced to undertake the adventure. It starts to the tune of hilarious comedy, and while that quality is a dominant part of all that ensues, it winds up sincerely. Not everything runs smoothly for Ayers, even in the situations when love-proof Billie is unaware of the gag inspiring his assault on her heart. When she does, the action is exciting.

But even though Ayers is willing to call it a day and quit, the sailors, led by Baker, are determined that their champion shall carry on and Billie and cocky Crabbe be humbled. As the yarn takes a light dramatic twist with Billie, the woman at bay, determined she shall not be conquered, Ayers' cohorts concoct a situation that causes her to capitulate and Crabbe loses his title as the fleet's number one ladies' man.

Fun is the outstanding entertainment and exploitation quality of the piece. As there never is a serious moment in the whole story, it is of that character that appeals to almost any kind of audience. Wholesomely handled throughout, the film can be offered to patrons as pleasing and lively amusement.

Nobody's Fool

(Universal)

Modern Comedy

The characteristic humor of Edward Everett Horton, indispensable mainstay of many a heavily exploited production, is given full latitude here as the central factor of a modern, smartly turned out comedy in which Mr. Horton demonstrates complete competence. Incidental ingredients are the real estate business, an assortment of racketeers, the old-fashioned theory that happy homes make prosperous communities and, of course, romance.

"Nobody's Fool" is a particularly pat title. It describes the central character exactly. Promotional material linking star and title, with a smattering of nouns denoting the items of content, appear to be indicated. The picture moves swiftly, merrily, at times a little dangerously, altogether in a manner much to be desired in a season somewhat lopsided with serious cinema.

Mr. Horton is cast as Will Wright, a volunteer sociologist and realtor from upstate New York, who is employed by a city racketeer to act as "fall guy" in a scheme to take money away from Dizzy Rantz, gangster, by means of a real estate swindle. Wright proceeds, innocently, to obey instructions, preaches and practices his "happy homes" doctrine with such zeal that he brings all parties to the affair into line as sponsors of a civic movement duly indorsed by the district attorney. Incidentally, he marries the girl.

Tundra

(Burroughs-Tarzan)

Adventure

Here is educational entertainment which rates well above the classification of a travelogue, as which it might easily have been designated. Gripping in its intensity, "Tundra" tells the story of a self-sacrificing doctor of the north whose plane crashes in the wilds of the arctic circle. Cutting a lone trail through the arctic waste of the Alaskan tundra, the film chronicles the adventures that beset the man, Del Cambre, on his 400 mile trek.

The picture was seven months in the making in its native background and has pictorial and dramatic values seldom achieved in a picture of its caliber. Vividly descriptive in its picturization of animal warfare, glaciers, ice floes and forest fires, the picture is extraordinary entertainment for any bill.

Fine pictorial values, drama involving man and beast, and the natural educational nature of the film have been successfully combined as a truly unusual offering for enterprising exploitation.

The story, throughout the hazardous trip, features the exploits of two bear cubs who contrive to win their way into the hearts of the audience despite the seeming dangers to which they subject the hero of the story.

Interesting scenes of the wild include shots at wolves, muskoxen, caribou, muskrat, beavers, salmon leaping falls, fox, moose and bears in their natural environment.

Excellently produced by George W. Stout, and directed by Norman Dawn, who also collaborated on the photography with Jacob and Edward Kull as well as penned the story, the picture has genuine mass appeal.

(Invincible)

Mystery Drama

With the names of Reginald Denny, Jack LaRue and Inez Courtney to offer, the picture may be exploited for its story as well as its personalities. Essentially, it is a murder mystery, though it also has some elements of comedy. The action is played against a backstage background and the characters are for the most part theatrical people.

The story opens with a rehearsal of a play by Reginald Denny. Evelyn Brent, leading lady of the company, while married to Claude King, is involved in extra-marital romance with Hugh Marlowe, the company juvenile; Bryant Washburn, her husband's partner in the production of the play, and Crauford Kent, a character actor. When both Washburn and King are found murdered, Inez Courtney, who has been secretary to the partners, urges Denny, who writes mysteries, to try solving the crimes.

Denny, at first reluctant to interfere, is practically forced to take part by LaRue, a gangster, who is a suspect though innocent, La Rue's motive being to clear his own name. When Denny finally reconstructs his theory of the crime he returns to the theatre, has the players enact his version and traps the killer. The direction of Phil Rosen treats the theme from a comedy angle, and additional laughs are provided by Miki Morita, a Japanese actor who portrays Denny's houseboy. Robert Homans plays the part of a police lieutenant whose efforts to solve the mystery fail.

Comedy-Drama

This is a forceful dramatic offering, adapted from Somerset Maugham's play, dealing with a financial wizard's romantic, financial and political adventures. There is conviction in the story, which is packed with incident and suspense and lightened by comedy. Special mention must be made of the song, "Night Must Fall." The tragic climax of the picture will cause plenty of controversy but is obviously inevitable.

John Lodge, who plays the leading role, gives a masterful portrayal of the unscrupulous financier, who is lovable, notwithstanding his highhandedness and shady dealings. While embarking on a stiff fight for parliamentary re-election, his wife, in love with another politician, threatens divorce. As it would ruin him and her lover, both financially and politically, he bullies her into publicly announcing that all is well.

During the election contest she finds herself again in love with her masterful husband. At the moment when he is reelected to Parliament and he realizes his wife's loyalty, disaster takes him in the threatened exposure of his illegal methods by his life-long friend and political manager—the tenth man, who is neither knave nor fool and who cannot be cajoled or bought into loyalty to his fallen idol. Clifford Evans portrays the role of the man whose conscience is his guide.

The English electioneering and polling scenes are funny, exciting and full of suspense. Antoinette Cellier is coldly satisfactory as the wife. Athole Stewart as the father, who is a pawn in the wizard's financial dealings, and George Graves, who supplies much comedy as an election agent, deserve especial mention. The remainder of the cast have been well chosen and Brian Desmond Hurst has directed the picture with understanding and sincerity.

The Amazing Quest

(Garrett Klement - United Artists)

Comedy-Romance

Comedy, with a flavoring of romance, based on the E. Phillips Oppenheim "Amazing Quest of Mr. Ernest Bliss," this very smartly made example of British production has something to appeal to most publics and to most ages. Basic story values are sound, episodically it is very amusing, and there is a sob-in-the-throat touch in the theme of a rich young man, voluntarily penniless, acting as fairy godfather to the poor persons who have treated him right.

The highlights are such broadly humorous episodes as the engagement of the disguised millionaire to pose as himself and pass a cheque with his own forged signature, and the "free meals for all" ruse by which he puts over the business of an oven manufacturer who has given him a job. Both scenes suggest effective selling and there is another advertising angle in the fact that, penniless himself, the hero is allowed to use his money to help others.

Ernest Bliss, who has inherited £2,000,000, consults a doctor and is told he is suffering from underwork. Stung, he wagers £50,000 that he will earn his own living for a year, using none of his fortune for himself. Before he finds a job as an oven salesman he gets well over the hunger line, and is helped by a good natured landlady.

He puts over the oven business by a free meals stunt but has to quit when a partnership is offered him. As porter to a market gardener, feminine, he runs against a returned husband, and as a chauffeur he receives the unusual offer from crooks already described, which ends in a big fight and the smashing of his own furniture.

Maintaining through various hardships his love affair with the secretary-girl encountered in his first job, he voluntarily breaks the terms of the wager, a few days before he would win it, when he finds that she is going to marry her employer in order to provide a home for a sick sister. Prominent at the wedding are the curiously assorted friends he has made in the slums.

Story merits, a book title, and the names of Cary Grant and Mary Brian are the selling values.

Feminine Form

Exercise Study

The things a girl can do to obtain and more or less permanently retain the thing called symmetry, figure or form, as distinguished in title reference from that which athletes call by the same name, are depicted in the doing with various young women doing the depicting. Not all of the things are routine. For one, the didoes achieved in a pair of parallel rings that roll all over the countryside, have not been generally adopted. Another gadget is in the nature of a springlike harness connecting feet and neck and amenable to no doubt beneficial stretching. Then there's archery, and the indispensable diving, with an adagio team demonstrating at the close of the subject how fine it is to be fit and fair and so forth. Important or not, and no claim to importance is made, the subject is easy to look at and in good taste.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Alpine Rendezvous

Music Study

In the measure that a given audience is predisposed for or against yodeling as music, entertainment or what not, this picture is good or bad. Another way of saying that the yodeling is good yodeling, also that yodeling is all there is, except skiing, which falls, broadly, in the same esoteric bracket. There is more yodeling than skiing, though, and the yodelers get the billing. They are the Buccaneers, the Fox Brothers, Roy Halle (pronounced as yodeled) and Wilf Carter (nor is Wilf a missprint for Wolf). The item is nicely staged and unquestionably valuable as diversion for Alp-conscious or perspiring audiences.—Running time, 10½ minutes.

Disputed Decisions

Interesting

Here is an interesting record of some of the more famous disputes that are still a subject for discussion wherever sport fans gather. Included are scenes of the Kentucky Derby, won by Broker's Tip when Head Play was disqualified; the Detroit-St. Louis World Series game where Medwick apparently spiked Owen of Detroit; the race for the America's Cup when Sopwith's claim of foul against Harold Vanderbilt went unrecognized; the Cunningham-Mangan mile race of last season, and the Army-Navy football game which resulted in a tie. Running time, 10 minutes.

Little Champs

Fair

Youngsters are presented in various sports ranging from marbles to riding bronco busters. After the marble champion has been crowned the camera shifts to a very young lad who shoots glass balls hanging barely an inch from his father's face. After this are shown junior skiers, wrestlers, boxers, football players and finally the bronco busting youngsters, who, while not very successful with the broncos, show undaunted courage. Narrative by Jack Kofoed. Described by Ford Bond. Running time, 10 minutes.

Clyde McCoy and His "Sugar Blues" Orchestra

(Vitaphone)

Very Good

Rhythmic music, vocal interludes and interpretative dancing are combined here, successfully, in a most entertaining number of the "Melody Master" series. Clyde McCoy, besides leading the orchestra, really "goes to town" when he plays his trumpet. The interpretative dancing, if that is its proper name, is performed by a number of ballroom dancers, recruited from Roseland, in New York, who, it is evident, thoroughly enjoyed themselves in their work. Other specialties are by Ruth and Billy Ambrose, Bill Hawley and Gloria Fay. Directed by Joseph Henabery. Running time, 10 minutes.

Porky, the Rainmaker

(Vitaphone)

Very Good

A very good number of the "Looney Tune" cartoon series. In this, Porky sets out to the village from Pa Pig's drought stricken farm to buy feed. Instead of feed Porky brings back an assortment of rain, wind, ice, sleet, earthquake, snow and fog pills. In anger Pa Pig throws the pills into the barnyard. The animals eat the pills, which immediately take effect, with telling results. When the rain comes Pa Pig forgets his peeve. Running time, 7 minutes.

That's Pictures

Clever

A cleverly conceived and directed short subject that employs the "fade out" with a comedy angle. Featuring Colonel J. C. Flippen as master of ceremonies this is entertaining fare. Colonel Flippen, of amateur hour fame, explains the "fade out" to the audience with examples, introducing several specialty acts including Mildred Law, Elizabeth Houston and Dan Harden, Adrienne Andre and Wyn Cahoon. Directed by Roy Mack. Running time, 20 minutes.

ERPI DEMONSTRATES NEW SOUND SYSTEM

"Mirrophonic" Equipment Exhibited During Five-Day New York Convention

New Western Electric sound equipment, embracing a theatre reproducing system and recording apparatus, was demonstrated this week to theatre operators and technicians by Electrical Research Products, Inc., at a five-day exhibit and national convention in New York. The exhibit and convention sessions, attended by Erpi sales and service men from all sections of the country, were held at the Hotel Pierre, while the new standard theatre system was demonstrated at the nearby Venice theatre.

The theatre sound system thus placed on the market has been given the name "Mirrophonic." A new Western Electric reproducer set is employed as standard in the "Mirrophonic" system. This unit has a film pulling mechanism known as the "kinetic scanner," in which a damped mechanical impedance is utilized to provide uniform film velocity. It has also an improved optical system in which the physical slit is replaced by a cylindrical lens combination.

In the amplifier equipment is employed a new device termed a "harmonic suppressor." This may be compared to an electrical governor which automatically, without any moving parts, causes the amplifier to maintain a constant character.

The new amplifiers run entirely on a.c., and all parts of the circuit requiring adjustment can be checked by means of a selector switch associated with a "percentage meter," the scale of which is graduated to read percentages of the normal or correct value, which is taken as 100%.

The "Di-Phonic" speaker system exhibited has been derived from developments first demonstrated in April, 1933, when the music of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra was transmitted from Philadelphia to Washington by engineers of the Bell Laboratories. The term "Di-Phonic" indicates that the sound is reproduced in two frequency ranges, upper and lower. The upper range is handled by cellular high-frenquency horns of the type employed in the Philadelphia-Washington demonstration, which insure that the sound shall be evenly distributed throughout the theatre, instead of being chiefly concentrated in a beam over one area. The low-frequency speakers are of the dished-baffle type, in which the principle of cellular sub-division is again employed to obtain proper low-frequency distribution. The combination of the new speakers and amplifiers produces sound of a range and quality not hitherto commercially available, and, as mentioned before, this is achieved not only at favorable points, but throughout the theatre.

Heavy Duty Set

Besides the standard type reproducer set described above, there was also shown a heavy duty deluxe type of reproducer set.

The drive is from a motor which is built into the front of the unit, silence and smoothness of operation being assured by the use of gears running in oil. The film-pulling mechanism employs an oil-damped film velocity control, which is a highly developed form of the "kinetic scanner." In scanning, the conventional narrow scanning beam has been superseded by an arrangement termed the "optical bridge," in which an image of the illuminated sound track, magnified ten times, is projected on a slit 12 mils wide. Repairs and replacements are facilitated by interchangeable motors and automatic projector alignment. The latter permits of removing a projector and replacing it again without any need to readjust the picture on the screen.

New Recording Apparatus

The recording equipment included a new recording channel which represents one of the many combinations possible with the new line of recording equipment which is being brought out this year. This channel is a portable system designed for recording on a film separate from the picture film. It can be mounted in a light-weight truck or used for almost any type of portable service. The various units are housed in substantial duralumin cases provided with carrying straps.

Another recording system exhibited was a portable channel for newsreel work, which weighs complete only 88 pounds, can be carried with camera in the baggage compartment of a small coupe, and can be set up ready for operation in three minutes. It makes its sound record on the same film used for the picture.

A new amplifier designed for use in the newsreel system was also shown. This amplifier includes a two-position mixer, facilities for using two dynamic microphones (or a condenser-transmitter if desired), dialogue equalization, low-pass filter, 1,000-cycle testing oscillator and headphone monitoring circuit.

The new Western Electric small non-directional dynamic microphone was another recording item, and a newly developed monitorizing headset was shown which uses moving coil receivers and provides quality approximating that of a good loudspeaker.

Ads to Inform Public

Sales sessions were conducted under the direction of C. W. Bunn, general sales manager of Erpi. In addressing the convention, Mr. Bunn said that the marketing of the new Western Electric equipment would be accompanied by a lavish advertising campaign addressed to the public, publicizing the name "Mirrophonic" so that it would in turn have advertising value for the theatres having the new equipment. Mr. Bunn stated that the principles applied in the new theatre apparatus were known to Bell Laboratories engineers three years ago, but that Erpi had waited until exhibitor demand and purchasing power warranted such an extensive revision of the Western Electric reproducing system.

In another address, Whitford Drake, executive vice-president of Erpi, definitely set aside all rumors relative to the probable future of Erpi when he declared that Erpi would not be sold. He said, "While a number of efforts to buy Erpi have been made, all have been turned down, as all offers in the future will be." He reiterated and emphasized that Erpi had never been for sale.

Other speakers at the sessions were H. G. Knox, vice president of Erpi; E. S. Gregg, assistant controller; F. B. Foster, Jr., treasurer; H. M. Besse, credit manager; W. A. Wolf, advertising manager for Western Electric; P. L. Palmerton, export manager, and E. G. Moriarity, general attorney for Western Electric.

Others attending from both the Erpi home office and territorial offices were: D. C. Collins, L. W. Conrow, J. S. Ward, H. Santee, G. R. O'Neill, J. P. Maxfield, G. Dobson, Burt Sanford, W. P. TEACHERS BOYCOTT HEARST MEDIUMS

The American Federation of Teachers, said to represent more than 20,000 teachers, has voted to boycott all film enterprises, newspapers, radio stations and other mediums of communication owned or controlled by William Randolph Hearst. The action was taken on the closing day of a five day convention held in Philadelphia this week. The resolution characterizes Mr. Hearst as "the chief foe of labor and friend of fascism" and includes in the boycott "numerous agencies of communication such as movies, newsreels, newspapers, magazines and radio."

The teachers are militantly reacting to Mr. Hearst's discussions of radicalism in the schools.

"Anthony Adverse" Opening Attracts Early Crowds

Despite rain and the advanced prices, crowds formed lines more than two blocks long 45 minutes before "Anthony Adverse" opened on Wesnesday morning at the Strand, New York. The doors were opened at 9 A. M. and the picture went on the screen before a capacity house at 9:30. The house which was redecorated for the occasion, is running on a continuous performance basis with the last show finishing at 3:37 A. M. According to Warner Brothers every box office and attendance record in the history of the house was broken with the premiere.

TRADEVIEWS

By FRED STANLEY

This column has devoted many words recently to the magnificent strides being made by the independents in their desire to make better pictures. Yesterday we had the pleasure of seeing "Tundra," a Burroughs-Tarzan picture that can well take its place in that "better picture parade." An animal picture, to be sure—but unlike anything ever filmed before, particularly under independent release. It is of first-run caliber. It is stirring, suspenseful, and carries a great emotional wallop. Filmed in the wild country of Alaska, it is one animal picture that is believable and not obviously faked. It is so constructed and told that it has every essential that should be present in fine pictures, whether dealing with human beings or animals. A lot is going to be heard of this picture, and our hats are off to Burroughs-Tarzan, to Norman Dawn, who directed, wrote and turned camera on much of the picture, and to all who had a hand in it. Our sympathy also is extended to the new Universal, which lost out on getting the picture. It was started by Carl Laemmle during the old regime, but didn't pass to the new owners.

Seven months of adventurous filming across Alaska wilds and arctic tundra by Norman Dawn and Del Cambre, amplified with appropriate material to give it human interest, is amply continuity, packs enter-with fascinating, refreshing any bill. tainment which will grace Picture, running 75 minutes, is one of the best and certainly the most complete assembly of wild animal life in its native habitat ever photographed for popular interest. It has thrills galore, gorgeous pictorial beauty, natural comedy in the antics of wild creatures, suspense in the well concocted tale of a flying frontier doctor fighting his way across mountain and barren after his plane is wrecked, and a diversity of excitements which will hold any mass audience rapt. Picture is more than a mere travelog. Camera work by Norman Dawn, Jacob Kull and Edward Kull imaginative, dramatically selective and patiently skillful in capturing not alone the wild life along the wilderness journey but the majesty and lonely grandeur of forest, tundra and arctic ocean. Ice avalanches provide startling thrills. A pair of bear cubs, carried through the picture, indulge in antics and squabbles which will keep adults as well as kids genuinely amused. Threats from infuriated animals, savage mass attack by starving dogs in Alaska outpost, life and death survival contests by beast, bird and fish, infuse the human story with mounting excitements. Among animals shown in unusual and surprised activities are polar bears, brown bear, moose, mink, goat, musk oxen, caribou, muskrat, otter, snowshoe rabbits, beavers, white and red fox, ermine, beavers, wild bird colonies and salmon running falls. All are in natural movement of wilderness drama.

Del Cambre as the flying doctor of the tundra, messenger of mercy to accident victims and plague riddden hamlets, carries the human story effectively. Wrecked in icy seas, he starts across a 400-mile trek to nearest settlement, accompanied by the bear cubs, beset by adventure every mile of the way.

Direction by Norman Dawn is excellent in meshing all his elements and driving story along without sag, while developing every bit of animal and wilderness interest. Film editors Walter Thompson and Thomas Neff have done a masterful job in dovetailing material. Abe Meyer's musical score is well adapted. Technical work throughout is of high order. Continuity and dialog by Norton S. Parker from Norman Dawn's story is exceptionally skillful, and Arthur B. Smith has done fine job of recording.

Picture will be relished by anyone who likes outdoor stuff, adventure and simple, natural humor. A natural for the family zones, it also has provocative novelty for class audiences if properly sold.

Alaska Film Held Unique

Best nature film with story in months in "Tundra," produced by the Burroughs-Tarzan organization, which was previewed last night at the R.-K.-O. Hillstreet Theater. It compares more than favorably with "Sequoia." Norman Dawn did the directing, and though the feature is crude as to actual dialogue, the views of wild life, and the suspense concerning the fate of an aviator lost in the Alaskan wilderness, lend an engrossing qualifty to the production, much out of the ordinary.

Two bears just about steal the film. They are excellent comedians. They are the pals of the lost aviator on his lonely trek. Time and again the trio are beset by dangers. which culminate when they are set upon by a pack of wild dogs in a ghost city, where an influenza epidemic has raged.

The story concerns the activities of a doctor in Alaska, who travels to his patients by airplane. His plane cracks up while he is en route to a settlement where the population is in the throes of death. He then becomes a lone battler in the Tundra (virtually uncharted land,) as it is called. The effort to procure sustenance, fire, and any sort of comfort rivals the experiences of a Robinson Crusoe, but the bears are capital companions. More than once they were responsible for gales of laughter.

Skouras Discusses Exhibition Values

The increased value of pictures creates the necessity for better exhibition, Spyros Skouras declared at a meeting of Fox theatre men in Kansas City this week. Assigning the proper value to a picture and then getting all that value out of it at the box office through proper booking, dating and running time was the chief topic discussed by the circuit head.

Contract details, a more thorough knowledge of which was declared necessary for bookers and district managers if pictures are to be properly handled, were discussed at the second day's session. Distributor officials were given two hours each in which to explain their pictures and the selling points.

Distributing heads present at the session included Ned E. Depinet, Jules Levy and A. S. Shubert of RKO, Gradwell L. Sears and S. Charles Einfeld of Warner Brothers and Ken Hodkinson, west coast district manager for Gaumont British.

Blumenstock Takes New Warner Post

Mort Blumenstock, who has been assistant to Joseph Bernhard and handling publicity and advertising for the national Warner circuit, has been named advertising manager for Warner-First National, succeeding Stanley Shuford, who joins the Biow Agency on September 1st. Harry Goldberg, former head of advertising and publicity for Warners' theatres in Philadelphia, has taken over Mr. Blumenstock's former duties.

Before joining Warner Brothers five years ago Mr. Blumenstock was a director for Paramount and prior to that engaged in independent production.

Nova Scotia Unit Holds Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the Allied Exhibitors of Nova Scotia was held late last week in Halifax, where the following resolution was passed:

"Resolved that the Allied Exhibitors of Nova Scotia place themselves on record as opposed to the practice that has recently developed in the Maritime Provinces, of Producers, Distributors or their agents entering into competition with exhibitors by operating, leasing, booking or in any other manner competing either publicly or privately in the theatre business.

"That it has come to the attention of the members of the association that certain agents of some Distributors have recently entered into the theatre business in the Maritime Provinces, and that unless the said agents disassociate themselves with one or the other branches of the business immediately, the members of the Allied Exhibitors will take such measures to protect their interests as they may see fit."

Soviet Industry Plans Production Of 450 Next Year

The Government controlled Soviet motion picture industry, which has scheduled 300 features for this year, is planning to increase that number to 450 next year, according to V. I. Verlinsky, president of Amkino, who returned to New York this week after a trip to Moscow where he conferred with Russian producers.

A new studio center is being developed in the southern part of the Crimea, Mr. Verlinsky said, and present plans call for its completion by 1938. It is expected that 200 features a year will be produced there.

Of the 100 pictures he saw, Mr. Verlinsky has decided to import 12 to supplement the previous 13 on Amkino's current releasing schedule. Among the dozen will be "Nightingale, Nightingale," the first all-color Soviet picture in the two color process; "Prisoners," "Der Kampf," "Son of Mongolia," made in Mongolia with all native talent; "Seekers of Happiness," "Generation of Conquerors," "Last Night," "Returning of Maxim," "Paris Commune," "13," and "Your Country Calls You."

Amkino plans to release 20 features in 1937, the executive said. The first on this program will be "Peter the First," which is to be made at a cost of $2,500,000. The picture, from a story by Alexis Tolstoi, will be the greatest undertaking in the Russian film industry, he declared.

There are approximately 32,000 screens in Soviet Russia today and by the end of 1937 there will be 70,000. Mr. Verlinsky explained that the numbers do not signify permanent theatres but include clubs, halls, portable outfits and traveling theatres for farmers. Of the 32,000 only 4,000 theatres are wired, he said.

During the current year Russia imported three or four American pictures, the Amkino head stated. As film buyer for the Soviet Government, he expects this number to be increased next year. He took with him 10 American features which he screened abroad. He declared that the main objection to importing more American films is due to language difficulties.

Imperial Changes Distribution Plan

Imperial Pictures will release its 1936-37 program through its nationwide franchised booking offices for direct contact with theatre circuits, having abandoned distribution through states rights exchanges. The product consists of 30 features. William Pizor, president of the company, notified the coast offices of the change from New York this week.

The new policy is in accordance with an expansion program which calls for the annual production of six major exploitation specials, eight dramas, eight classics and eight Tim McCoy pictures.

Ban on "Ecstasy" Upheld By Kansas City Board

The appeal board appointed by City Manager H. F. McElroy in Kansas City to view "Ecstasy" and determine whether or not the city censors were right in refusing to approve it, have upheld by a uninamous vote the censors' opinion that it should not be shown to the public. The Royal theatre, as a consequence, may go into the state courts to prevent city officials from interfering with the showing of the picture. Jack Truitt and Breck Fagin, operators of the house, have not announced their plans, although they have continued to advertise the opening.

"Production Guide" For 1936 Published

The Production Guide and Director's Annual for 1936, published by THE FILM DAILY, contains a total of 465 pages of pertinent production material. It is now being distributed throughout the industry. Features of the publication include production programs of all companies for 1936-37; biographies of directors and producers; a catalogue of the work of production principals; personnel of producing companies throughout the country and a list of features released during the first half of 1936.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

AND SO THEY WERE MARRIED: Mary Astor, Melvyn Douglas—No marquee names and material in story. Suitable for a two reel Our Gang Comedy instead of an eight reel feature. Business at its worst. Played August 1.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

DEVIL'S SQUADRON: Richard Dix, Karen Morley—Air pictures are very popular in this territory; never played one that was not a business booster. It is a fact that the youth of today is very much air-minded. Why not satisfy this craving and give them this kind of entertainment? This picture was very capably done; nothing cheap to it. Played July 31.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

DEVIL'S SQUADRON: Richard Dix, Karen Morley—Moved this off a double bill after seeing it and it brought the men in for a nice mid-week business. Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 5-6.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Small town patronage.

HEROES OF THE RANGE: Ken Maynard, June Gale—Very fair and attracted the usual western fans. Played August 8.—C. W. Mills Co., Inc., Arcade Theatre, N. Y. Family patronage.

KING STEPS OUT, THE: Grace Moore, Franchot Tone—Unquestionably an excellent production. The voice of Grace Moore will ring in your ears long after you have seen the picture. Prestige for your theatre is the value of playing such high class pictures. The whole cast is superb. Kissing is noticeably absent, showing that the hot kiss so common in the regular run of pictures is not necessary for entertainment or love scenes. Excellent recording. Played July 28-29.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

LONE WOLF RETURNS, THE: Melvyn Douglas, Gail Patrick—Nice program picture. Played with Broadway Handicap and it pleased that audience. Played August 14.—Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—The big disappointment of the summer season for us. Fell very flat at the box office. Yet so many called it the best picture here in a long time. Can't figure it out quite. It's a dandy show. Capra at his best but really there is no "best" for Capra. He always does his job. No, I can't tell why it didn't go over. Just one of those things. Running time, 12 reels. Played August 2-3.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

MYSTERIOUS AVENGER: Charles Starrett, Joan Perry—This new western star, I think, is going to be all right. Played a fair role in this picture to a satisfied week end business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

First National

BULLETS OR BALLOTS: Edward G. Robinson, Joan Blondell—It's the tops of all the gangland pictures. One of Robinson's greatest roles. Running time, 81 minutes. Played August 12-14.—Howard B. Lee, National Theatre, Wilmington, Del. General patronage.

HEARTS DIVIDED: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—Pretty weak picture for these stars. Running time, 81 minutes. Played August 12-13.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

HEARTS DIVIDED: Dick Powell, Marion Davies, Edward Everett Horton, Charlie Ruggles—Certainly none in this great cast caused the picture to flop at the box office. If it were not for this superb cast there would be no business at all. The story is at fault and Warners scented this when they drew it from the percentage group. The cast gave me above average business the first night, but word of mouth advertising gave me a record low for the second night. Personally, I liked the picture very much. Played August 4-5.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

GB Pictures

RHODES, THE DIAMOND MASTER: Walter Huston—This is an okay production of its kind but for my community it certainly proved to be the wrong kind. Splendid recording. Played July 21-22.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

MGM

CHINA SEAS: Jean Harlow, Clark Gable, Wallace Beery—Good show but not the best. Cast good but the story not good enough for the stars to help them any. Very cruel in some parts and that's what hurts the picture. Beery steals the show from Harlow and Gable. Running time, nine reels. Played August 2-3.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: W. C. Fields, Lionel Barrymore, Freddie Bartholomew, Edna May Oliver, Maureen O'Sullivan, Madge Evans—There are more known stars in this play than in any other we have seen. The screen version closely follows Dicken's novel and the different dramatic situations are brought out with marvelous skill. This picture will satisfy all classes of playgoers. Played August 14-15.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

FURY: Sylvia Sidney, Spencer Tracy—Picture well done but only average at the box office. The price we paid made this a loser for us. Tracy means nothing and Sidney not much more than nothing. Played August 12-13.—Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

FURY: Spencer Tracy, Sylvia Sidney—No doubt a powerful melodrama, well produced, but business was very poor. Exceptional uneven recording which is characteristic in MGM features. Played July 18-20.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

RENDEZVOUS: William Powell, Rosalind Russell—Good spy picture but the title did not mean a thing at the box office. Running time, 95 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

ROBIN HOOD OF ELDORADO, THE: Warner Baxter, Ann Loring—A sure hit. Got everything it takes. Running time, 86 minutes. Played July 5-6.—Rudolph J. Covi, Covi's Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town patronage.

SMALL TOWN GIRL: Janet Gaynor, Robert Taylor—This is one swell show that pleased everyone. If I could have played this picture about 90 days ago I believe it would have done a good business. Running time. 106 minutes. Played August 9-10.—C. R. Gregg, Liberty Theatre, Caney, Kansas. General patronage.

SPEED: Wendy Barrie, James Stewart—Entertaining little picture. Drew well second day. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 31-August 1.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Small town patronage.

WIFE VS. SECRETARY: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Myrna Loy—Good program picture that did poorly at the box office. It looks as if Clark Gable is slipping. This did not make money for us. Running time, 89 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Paramount

ANYTHING GOES: Bing Crosby, Ethel Merman Pretty good musical, rather silly in spots. This surely was not worth the rental we paid for same. This did not make money for us. Running time, 92 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: Jack Oakie, George Burns and Gracie Allen and Radio Stars—A satisfactory musical introducing a number of radio stars, including Burns and Allen, Amos and Andy, and others well known. Drew better than an average and there were no complaints. Running time, 97 minutes. Played July 26-27.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

BIG BROWN EYES: Joan Bennett, Cary Grant—This one, for us, was another to add to the list of the new style silly-smart comedies that Hollywood has been indulging in and that seem to be getting critical plaudits. The desperate efforts for laughs and Miss Bennett's attempts at wise cracking rather crashed by our crowd. There really must be something wrong with our sense of humor out here. Personally enjoyed it in spite of the things mentioned above. So did a few others. Running time, eight reels. Played August 6-7.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

CASE AGAINST MRS. AMES: Madeleine Carroll, George Brent—This gave good satisfaction. Many favorable comments from my Bank Night crowd. Running time, 85 minutes.—C. R. Gregg, Liberty Theatre, Caney, Kansas. General patronage.

CASE AGAINST MRS. AMES, THE: Madeleine Carroll, George Brent—Excellently produced trial picture. Very cleverly handled. Miss Carroll made a distinctly favorable impression. This one provides good entertainment, interesting, smartly done. Some reporters seemed to feel it did not come up to expectations. We didn't expect a sensation. Maybe that is why it went over. Running time, ten reels. Played August 9-10.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

HANDS ACROSS THE TABLE: Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray—An amusing program picture put on by a capable cast that will please better than some of the so-called specials. Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 2-3.—C. A. Jordon, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

MILKY WAY, THE: Harold Lloyd, Adolphe Menjou—Very good slapstick comedy. Running time, 88 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Sylvia Sidney, Fred MacMurray, Henry Fonda—Most satisfactory business in a long time. Picture seemed to please. Running time, 98 minutes. Played August 2-3.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Small town patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Sylvia Sidney, Fred MacMurray, Henry Fonda—A truly great photographic achievement, a marvelous picture to look at. Extra business, yes, but not what we had been led to expect. The thing that stood out in reviewing the engagement was that our people were disappointed in the story, its needless funeral scenes. Yet all admired the color and beauty. No one could fail to enjoy that. Running time, ten reels. Played July 26-27.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

DANCING PIRATE: Charles Collins, Steffi Duna—This was an absolute bust at the box office. It takes more than Technicolor to entice them these days. Most patrons thought it silly. Flirted with a new low record. Played August 10-11.—Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

EX-MRS. BRADFORD, THE: William Powell, Jean Arthur—I am still trying to figure out the reason for the unusually low gross on this picture.

Story was o. k. and was properly advertised but just failed to click. Running time, 81 minutes. Played August 9-10—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

EX-MRS. BRADFORD, THE: William Powell, Jean Arthur—This failed miserably at the box office. People want a story with action or comedy, not sophisticated dialogue. Running time, 81 minutes. Played August 2-3.—Rudolph J. Covi, Covi's Theatre, Hermine, Pa. Small town patronage.

LAST OUTLAW, THE: Hoot Gibson, Harry Carey—Those who crave action get it here. Very good. Running time, 73 minutes. Played July 24-25.—Rudolph J. Covi, Covi's Theatre, Hermine, Pa. Small town patronage.

LAST OUTLAW, THE: Harry Carey, Hoot Gibson—Very good western that clicked at the box office. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LET'S SING AGAIN: Bobby Breen, Henry Armetta—Bobby Breen's singing puts class in an ordinary picture. Will please. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 17-18.—Rudolph J. Covi, Covi's Theatre, Hermine, Pa. Small town patronage.

M'LISS: Anne Shirley, John Beal—Rather pleasing little picture. Not too strong at the box office for us, however. Running time, 66 minutes. Played July 26-27.—Rudolph J. Covi, Covi's Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town patronage.

MUSS 'EM UP: Preston Foster, Margaret Callahan—Very good G-Man type of action picture. Played it after "Special Agent." Not as good in our opinion. —Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

RAINMAKERS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—This comedy team has a following. They are not sellouts with us but did above average business.—Harold Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BAD BOY: James Dunn, Dorothy Wilson—A very good program picture but very short. Should be played on a double feature. Had the picture been three reels longer it could have been called a top notcher. James and Dorothy Wilson very good actors. Running time, six reels. Played August 7-8.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee—Just as good as any of the Temple pictures. Shirley always pleases the audience and that is all any exhibitor needs in these trying days of Depression. Running time, nine reels. Played August 9-10. —Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee—We were favored by delightfully cool weather and business was very good although not as large as this captivating Miss has attracted in the past. Played August 5-6.—C. W. Mills Co., Inc., Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

COUNTRY BEYOND, THE: Rochelle Hudson, Paul Kelly—Very satisfactory to normal business. Played August 1.—C. W. Mills Co., Inc., Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

EVERY SATURDAY NIGHT: June Lang, Thomas Beck—A program picture that will please all you can get in but the lack of star names in the cast makes it a bust at the box office. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 24-25.—C. A. Jordon, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

GENTLE JULIA: Jane Withers, Tom Brown—The kids fell for this one like a ton. Adults beginning to get interested in Withers. Jane looks like she is going places. Played August 15.—Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

GENTLE JULIA: Jane Withers, Tom Brown—This kept the audience in an uproar most of the time. A lot of people like Jane better than Shirley. They are both plenty good. Give this one your best playing time. Running time, 63 minutes. Played August 11-12.—C. R. Gregg, Liberty Theatre, Caney, Kansas. General patronage.

SONG AND DANCE MAN: Paul Kelly, Claire Trevor—A rather weak musical. Poor at the box office. Running time, 73 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers, John McGuire—Quite old but still a good picture for Friday-Saturday. Running time, 65 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TO MARY—WITH LOVE: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—Since reporting on this picture, I should like to add this amendment. In all fairness to 20th Century-Fox, I must say that business is unusually good everywhere. Opinions now coming to me from our patrons reveal that 50 per cent think the picture wonderful, while the other 50 per cent declare it is terrible. Exhibitors will have to judge their own situations and even if the picture does not come up to expectations in some places, it may please in others. But in any case, it looks destined to good box-office grosses. Running time, 90 minutes. Played August 9-12.—Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

United Artists

DARK ANGEL, THE: Merle Oberon, Fredric March, Herbert Marshall—A swell show from any angle. Will please 100 per cent. You can meet your patrons at the door on their way out and they will tell you how much they enjoyed the picture. Running time, 106 minutes. Played July 31-August 1.—C. A. Jordon, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY: Freddie Bartholomew, Dolores Costello Barrymore and fine cast—A fine production that deserves play dates in every theatre. Theatres will benefit by showing it. Freddie Bartholomew is a marvelous child, no question about it. Splendid recording. Played July 25-27.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

THESE THREE: Miriam Hopkins, Merle Oberon, Joel McCrea—As fine a picture as has been my privilege to show for many a nite. Sorry to say the attendance was in no way in proportion to the quality of the picture. There is no accounting for taste of the dear public. It makes a fellow think when a piece of cheese like "The Bride of Frankenstein" far out-grosses a production like "These Three"—and that is exactly what happened in my theatre. —A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

Universal

DANGEROUS WATERS: Jack Holt, Robert Armstrong—Good program for any night of the week. Jack is a finished actor and pleases most of the cash customers and Robert Armstrong also very good in Jack's supporting cast. Running time, seven reels. Played August 14-15.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

DON'T GET PERSONAL: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Twice the number of patrons on one night as compared with two nights with "Trouble for Two." The Dunn-Eilers team is certainly popular here. Played July 16.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

IVORY HANDLED GUNS: Buck Jones, Charlotte Wynters—A dandy western with good story, and action not over-done. Business average. Played July 17.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

STORMY: Noah Beery, Jr., Jean Rogers—Good for one day. Running time, 67 minutes. Played August 8.—Howard B. Lee, National Theatre, Wilmington, Del. General patronage.

SUTTER'S GOLD: Edward Arnold, Binnie Barnes, Lee Tracy—We consider this an exceptionally well produced feature but for some unaccountable reason our draw was very light. Played August 12-13.—C. W. Mills Co., Inc., Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

Warner Brothers

BIG NOISE, THE: Guy Kibbee, Warren Hull—Not bad entertainment for the masses. Clear, even recording. Business slightly below average. Played July 30.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

BOULDER DAM: Ross Alexander, Patricia Ellis—We were agreeably surprised in this picture, it being far superior to what we had been led to believe. Besides furnishing some very excellent shots of the dam, it had a better than ordinary story which was well acted and produced. Play this one. Played August 7-8.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

HEARTS DIVIDED: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—Pretty weak story; fails to make much impression. Business was way off. Marion should remake "When Knighthood Was in Flower." Both Miss Davies and Dick Powell seem miscast here. Played August 9-10.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

I MARRIED A DOCTOR: Pat O'Brien, Josephine Hutchinson—An excellent picture with plenty of life. Running time, 83 minutes. Played August 10-11.—Howard B. Lee, National Theatre, Wilmington, Del. General patronage.

PUBLIC ENEMY'S WIFE: Pat O'Brien, Margaret Lindsay—Not a big picture but a very good programmer that will please your audience. I had the Louis-Schmeling fight pictures on with "Public Enemy's Wife" and this made a fine evening's entertainment. Running time, 69 minutes. Played August 7-8.—C. R. Gregg, Liberty Theatre, Caney, Kansas. General patronage.

SATAN MET A LADY: Warren William, Bette Davis—Sad but true. The poorest Warren William picture I ever played. Very few liked it and they didn't hesitate to say so. Better leave it on the shelf. Running time, 74 minutes. Played August 13. —C. R. Gregg, Liberty Theatre, Caney, Kansas. General patronage.

SON'S O' GUNS: Joe E. Brown, Joan Blondell—This picture received some panning in this column, but it's o.k. Joe E. Brown stuff. Running time, 79

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

With the assistance of the nurse, April Shower and those crutches, we were able to get down to the Moon theatre the other night and see "These Three," with Miriam Hopkins, Merle Oberon and Joel McCrea. It is quite likely that the reviewers, who know pictures, will not class this one along with some of the best, but, as we saw it, it is an interesting story played by a capable cast and directed by a director who knows how to direct.

The youngster, Bonita Granville, as Mary, the headstrong self-willed, spoiled child, played the part so splendidly that she gave the principals a mighty swift run for the front seat. She played the ornery, spitfire, hysterical girl so strongly that when you see her you will want to use a bedslat on her, and when she ran away from school and went back to her grandmother and told her a lot of fish stories about the way she had been abused, we would have rejoiced to have seen the grandmother take her over her knee and use a hardwood shingle with both hands.

The mercury has taken a nose dive downward from 105 to 70 and it has been raining a little this morning, and as a result, if it wasn't for our toe, and some more things, we'd feel like we could lick our weight in wildcats.

It was announced over the radio today that hundreds of families in the burned up districts of the Dakotas and Montana had started a trek to "The Golden West" and the home of the "Sunkist Oranges." Who says it doesn't pay to advertise? It looks like they had taken Horace Greely's advice to "Go west, young man, go west."

The August 1st issue of the HERALD says "Appleton Is Calling J. C. Jenkins." Well, we are here, and we haven't done a darn thing that we are ashamed of. R. G. Risch of the New Scenic theatre complains because we failed to call on him. His complaint is no doubt just. We should have called on him, but when the mercury hovered around 110 in the shade and we were heading for a lake where it was cool. We believe we will be excused for not driving 25 miles out of the way.

There are a lot more of the boys who kick because we passed 'em up, but we want them to remember that it isn't altogether our fault. It's a long way from Pennsylvania to the Pacific, and from Canada to the Rio Grande, and there are a lot of exhibitors between those points, and besides that, April Shower doesn't have wings.

We enjoyed the panning our friend Risch gave us, we probably deserved it, but when he said he didn't give a damn whether we called on him or not, we didn't like that so good, for we'd give several of 'em to go and call on him right now, because we think he is a pretty swell guy.

Our trip north in the heat was the worst since the birth of the republic, and we are still suffering from it, but we want you boys to remember that, whether we are able to call on you or not, we are stronger for you than horseradish, and the fact that we missed you should not be credited to indifference.

Are you following us Egbert? If our good friend Risch, of the Scenic theatre at Appleton, Minn., will try and temper his remarks with a little charity for us when it is 110 in the shade (and no shade) we will think that everything will come out all right.

The campaign speeches we are hearing over the radio incline us to wonder if our statesmen have all gone fishing.

We often hear some of the boys tell of braving machine gun fire over in France, but that's nothing. Last night we braved the heat and went down to the Moon theatre and saw "Bullets Or Ballots," with Edward G. Robinson doing the principal chores in his excellent way. This is another gangster picture, and a whole lot of people don't care so much for gangsters, but to us they are very educational, as they show us the actions of the gangsters on the screen as they could be shown in no other way. Warner Brothers should receive several pats on the back for this one.

Joan Blondell was operating a racket of her own, and if Edward G. hadn't been killed by a gangster, and had lived to marry Joan, it would have suited us better, for we consider any man who would marry Joan as having most excellent judgment. Frank McHugh was in it, too, and whenever they put Frank in a picture and give him something to do he always calls forth a lot of laughs from the audience, he's so doggone funny.

Isn't it funny that we often say just the reverse of what we mean? For instance, we hear people say that it is going to get cooler for "the sun has gone under a cloud" but that isn't what we mean at all. What we mean is that the clouds have come between the earth and the sun and shut off the sun's rays. The sun never came under anything. That expression reminds us of the girl who told us once that we were the nicest boy she ever knew, but when she said that her mind was focused on a redheaded fellow from the stock yards,

Say, Frank, oldtimer, this don't cost you or Edward G. a thing, not a darn thing, no matter if we do enjoy puffing a "perfecto" or something, now and then. You and Ed accept our kindest regards and thanks for your work in this one, and please divide up with Joan, too.

As we said before, we want you exhibitors to please remember—but then, we can imagine we can hear Ernie say "Oh, for gosh sake Colonel, are you going all over that again?"

[NOTE. Do any of you boys want to buy a pair of second-hand crutches that are well broken to ride?]

2,000-FOOT REEL TRADE PROBLEM IN CHICAGO

Local Ordinance Prescribes More Magazine Clearance Than Will Be Obtainable

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH
in Chicago

The advent of the two thousand foot reel has both exhibitors and distributors here in a serious quandary. When the large reels arrive here the first part of September they will, unless some sudden changes take place, offer a multitude of problems.

One of these problems is the matter of complying with the city regulations, which were just recently passed, concerning the 2,000 foot reel. The ruling laid down by the local officials states in part that there must be one inch clearance between the outer edge of the reel and the inner edge of the film magazine. In order to comply with this ruling both exhibitors and distributors point out that only a fourteen inch reel can be used—the new reel universally adopted by the distributors is a fourteen and one-half inch reel. As a result, the films for every show will have to be re-wound on the smaller reel to comply with the city's rule, as the majority of magazines on the projectors are but 16 inches in diameter, a bit too small to allow the one inch clearance demanded.

As distributors and exhibitors alike are not in accord with the regulation, feeling that if other cities find the 14½-inch reel okay it should be acceptable here, it is probable that the use of the 14-inch reel regulation may be ignored. At least that attitude is very prevalent and will, it is reliably stated, be taken by the distributors.

Take-up Is Problem

The coming of the new reel also brings up another serious problem. The new take-up devised for the 2,000 foot reel, according to many, is not practical for use on the 1,000 foot spool. Thus, when a theatre has film on both size spools, as will be the case here for many weeks following the inauguration of the 2,000 foot reel, operators will be confronted with a difficult problem in order to handle the film properly. With the releasing situation as it is here, and with the advent of double features late in September, both last season's product on the 1,000 foot reel and new product on the 2,000 foot reels will oftimes be shown on the same bill.

The winding of the thousands of reels of last year's film in local vaults on the new 2,000 foot spools would be a tremendous job, local experts maintain, and hardly practical. Still the problem of how to handle the film properly remains unanswered.

Several weeks ago Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, sent out a notice to all theatre managers here that, for the mutual benefit of projectionists and exchanges, they would, after September 1, send out all national releases longer than 1,000 feet on 2,000 foot reels. After this notice was sent out the Balaban & Katz circuit advised their managers to disregard the notice until further orders and run all film on 1,000 foot reels. This order was undoubtedly issued so that their projectionists could comply with the local union rule which states that reels must not be over 1,000 feet in length.

Censor Board Objects

New films brought in for review by the local censor board on the 2,000 foot reel will be cut and shown on the 1,000 foot reel until the union ruling is changed, it is reported.

The national approval of the 2,000 foot reel is expected shortly at the local union offices, according to Frank Clifford, business manager of the group, who said he expected to hear from George Browne, president of the IATSE, within the next few days, regarding this situation.

It is highly probable that the decision of the union regarding the larger reels will have a direct bearing on the city's ruling concerning the exact size of the reel. If the 14½-inch reel is okayed by the union the present city ruling probably will be changed to conform with the rulings adopted elsewhere.

"We are entitled to a substantial decrease in the salaries we pay operators," was the statement made by Morris Leonard, head of the Chicago Exhibitor's Association, when queried regarding his organization's stand on the matter of a 25 per cent increase in wages which is being asked by the local operator's union prior to the working out of a new contract with exhibitors for the coming year.

Last week Aaron Saperstein, head of Allied Theatres, announced that his organization was demanding a 10 per cent reduction in operator's salaries. This brings both the circuit and independent groups together as far as a demand for lower wages for operators is concerned. Local exhibitors feel projectionists are overpaid at present in proportion to other branches of the industry and say they will definitely oppose any raise to pay.

After three minor deletions in dialogue the Chicago film censor board gave "Anthony Adverse" a general permit instead of the "pink" ticket originally decided upon and the film will now have it's first loop showing starting September 11th, in the Chicago theatre instead of in the United Artists theatre as previously announced.

Booking this film into the Chicago, which plays pictures on a flat rental basis only, means that Balaban & Katz gave Warners one of the highest rentals ever offered for any film shown here. The picture will be augmented by a strong stage show and is expected to run at least three weeks.

Starting this weekend a gigantic newspaper advertising campaign will be launched on the showing in order to start it off on a recordbreaking run in the 4,000 seat house. Both the Balaban & Katz and Warner press departments are uniting in putting over this campaign which will begin with the insertion of full page advertisements in local papers.

The setting of "Anthony Adverse" into the Chicago on September 11th ties in with the starting of double-features here on that date at the larger Balaban & Katz neighborhood theatres. At that time the Uptown, Marbro and Tivoli are slated to start dual bills and it expected that by the following week the entire city will be offering double features. Although considerable pressure has been brought to bear, it is understood that Balaban & Katz are set on playing the twin bills and will start them on the above mentioned date. The opening of "Adverse" in the loop at the Chicago is said to be an example of what loop offerings will be to compete with the double-features offered outside the loop.

Current at the Chicago theatre is "His Brother's Wife," which had a recordbreaking weekend and is expected to near the house record for gross. The opening last Friday was the largest since world's fair days and following the heavy weekend trade, Balaban & Katz executives decided to hold the picture for another week before putting it in another loop theatre.

Grand National, which held a sales convention at the Medinah Club last weekend, will have offices in the Warner building according to present plans. Final details for leasing the office space are being made in New York this week by James Winn, assistant to Carl Leserman, vice-president and general sales manager.

Earle Silverman, formerly with Warners here, is in charge of the local exchange for Grand National and expects to have his sales force organized during the next few weeks, as selling of the company's product is slated to start immediately.

The sales meeting held here was a repetition of the one held in New York earlier in the week. Leserman and Edward Finney, publicity and advertising director, were here to address the midwest and western sales leaders.

The possessor of the longest airplane ticket ever sold, William Heineman, Universal sales drive leader, flew in long enough last week to address the local sales force and exchange personnel and confer with Messrs. Gomersall and Herbel regarding sales drive plans. Heineman left here for Minneapolis. During his air trip Heineman will visit 37 exchanges in 21 days and cover 17,000 miles in so doing. So far he has covered three-fifths of his journey and expects to finish the air tour by Labor Day.

"Romeo and Juliet," which opens Sunday, August 30th, at the Erlanger theatre, is receiving much support from local women's clubs. Through the efforts of Mrs. Jennie F. Purvin, Miss Emma Abplanalp and Mrs. Richard McClure, many special tieups have been arranged. Outstanding among these is the display of costumes used in the picture at Mandel Brothers, one of the city's largest department stores. More than 3,000 square feet of space has been devoted for the display, which will be shown for three to four weeks. Fred Bartow, M.G.M. press representative, made some of the arrangements for the display while in Hollywood last month.

"The Heart of A Woman," a Chinese film, was okayed here last week by the censor board and will be shown in the Chinese section of the city in an effort to raise money for Chinese students. M. Chee of New York brought the film here for the showing and is in charge of affairs. It is the first all-talking picture ever made in China and was produced in Shanghai.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

NURSEMAIDS AND POSTAGE STAMPS

It's to be super-theatre service rather than picture exploitation at the Fox Midwest Theatres this coming season, according to the statement of headman Elmer Rhoden, at the circuit's recent convention. Because Mr. Rhoden feels that the actual value of the past year's exploitation campaigns is debatable and is inclined to believe that too many dollars have been wasted on them, "super-service to patrons" is now to be the Fox Midwest battle cry. Among these services are to be "a reliable list of nursemaids to stay with the children while the parents go to the show and a stamps and mail service for patrons with letters."

Said here before and said again is that Elmer Rhoden can be counted among the country's keener showmen. He is, so to speak, willing to try anything once where the "anything" in question affords potentialities for tilted grosses. Therefore Mr. Rhoden's conclusions are to be weighed with care.

But the latest Midwest idea of selling the theatre more and the picture less though meritorious is nevertheless not the entire answer to the problem. Mr. Rhoden may well believe that the actual value of his circuit's past year's exploitation campaigns is debatable but that does not mean there need be a wild stampede on the part of theatremen to try and exchange the bally and boxoffice sockeroo at 100-cents on the dollar for service that competent showmen are expected to deliver daily.

The goodwill and prestige builders, the lunch club, woman's club and City Hall contacts undoubtedly rank high, but colorful, yes, even screwy exploitation is still paying dividends to those who know how to handle it.

The Fox management further feels the new product is so good that selling efforts may safely be concentrated upon the theatre. Though this opinion is indeed highly complimentary to the studioites, it is to be doubted whether smart producers who look to the showman for assistance at the boxoffice will appreciate the added responsibility.

There never was a time when grosses on the best of pictures could not be bettered by skillful exploitation and there is no reason now to believe otherwise. A manager may build up the best of contacts, have a million friends, offer the very last word in service and still be lacking if he doesn't take advantage of every possible honest selling angle to exploit every change of program. Certainly, give 'em courtesy and comfort, build those invaluable contacts—but not at the expense of high-power exploitation.

Fox Midwest patrons come from various walks of life and it is reasonable to suppose that not every ticket buyer is so constituted as to comprehend the delicate nuances of those ultra-services the theatremen are prepared to give. An important slice of business will continue to come from folks who react more to color and noise, to the lure of the bally.

In the final analysis, the value of picture exploitation in general is probably no more debatable than the benefits to be derived from the offer of nursemaids and postage stamps.

SHAKESPEARE, TAKE A BOW

To the shade of the Bard of Avon an extra bow for causing to be knitted more closely under one roof, so to speak, production and advertising of the motion picture. For, though the production forces are doing a better job of cooperating with the ad men, there still exists quite a problem faced by the ad forces of completing their promotional plans only after they have screened the finished prints.

The advent of William Shakespeare to the screen via Warner's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and most recently MGM's "Romeo and Juliet" has accomplished something in closing the gap between producing and advertising. From the earliest screen treatment the ad men were at work in the field, planting and planning every foot of the way, with the result that both pictures, long before their release dates, were known and much in demand.

There is no earthly reason why the same thing cannot be done for other releases as well. All branches of the industry would benefit thereby.

ADDED STRENGTH

Now second in command to S. Charles Einfeld, Warner Pictures director of advertising and publicity, Mort Blumenstock's promotion from his previous post of Warner Theatres ad head is good news in more ways than one. In the first place, Mort well rates his new honors and, secondly, theatremen will rejoice that one of their own has been advanced to a bigger job.

Blumenstock has capably filled many assignments in the industry and is entirely at home through long experience with the exhibitors' advertising problems.

In his new situation, Mort adds further strength to a highly efficient department.

Trade Ads and Announcement Books Make Up Unusual Lobby Display

Quite a few of the members make full use of motion picture trade advertising literature for inclusion in lobby and other display. Walter Davis, up in Regina, exhibits such material to his patrons quite frequently and now in the same tempo comes a photo, reproduced above, from Manager Wallace R. Allen, Schine's Athena Theatre, Athens, Ohio. Wally has been saving copies of trade paper ads and announcement books and from them selected a number of items for display on his big lobby board. The flash was made up inexpensively and was successful in attracting plenty of patron attention on the coming shows.

Gene Fox Arranges Safety Reel Preview

To tiein with the extensive safety campaign being conducted throughout New England on safe driving, Gene Fox, Metropolitan Theatre, Boston, ad head, arranged a preview of special short, "We Drivers," shown as part of the regular program. In addition, the Massachusetts Safety Council cooperated with the theatre on a safety contest for commercial vehicles.

Newspapers editorialized on the drive and on the last day of the showing the winner was presented with a silver shield in front of the theatre during a popular radio program broadcast in the lobby as part of the tieup. Angeline Maney, Gene's assistant, cooperated.

First, $350; second, $250; third, $150; fourth, $100; fifth, $75; sixth, $50, and seventh, $25. Campaigns to be eligible must be submitted to Campaign Editor, at Warner Bros. New York home office, 321 West 44th St., before January first. Warner men are not eligible for the prizes.

Dinerman Plugs "Pastures" With Newspaper Contest

Eddie Dinerman, Keith's Albee, Cincinnati, got a lot of space in papers in connection with a prize contest to plug "Green Pastures" by arranging with the Cincinnati Times Star to run a four-day contest which was based on titling drawings made by famous American artists expressly for the picture. Paper gave contest a huge ad day before and continued with stories and illustrations throughout contest. On day winners were announced, paper carried story on front page stories.

Redskins Raise Plenty of Dust For Les Pollock

The sound of the war drums and Indians on the loose resounded in the streets of Syracuse on Les Pollock's advance to inform the folks that "Last of the Mohicans" was in town at Loew's. Indians in full regalia covered the city on foot and in bannered cars distributing heralds and one of the surviving chiefs of the Mohican tribe brought in for the date was interviewed on the air and by the papers. Les promoted an Indian display from the municipal museum for lobby display to gather a lot of extra publicity.

Other newspaper stuff included a number of contests. There was, for instance, a five-day drawing contest with entrants penciling in the features of the various stars. Another was a "best letter" contest and the third was a classification slant wherein the title had to be created from letters in the first words of different want ads. Guest tickets were given the winners and in exchange the dailies were generous in plugging the picture. Leading stores also came in on differently styled co-op ads, women's shops featuring "Mohican Red" new style color.

Action stills and art shots were used liberally by Pollock to cover a 150-foot fence next to a central parking space and about every available vacant window in town was decorated. In addition to serializations of the story and the 13-record radio transcription promoted by the Round Tabler, stand-out stunt for the opening night was a colorful street parade in which the Indian braves were prominently spotted.

MICKEY'S BIRTHDAY NOW CELEBRATED

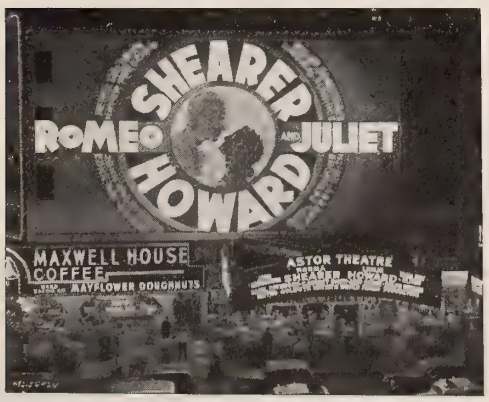
They're lighting eight candles in honor of Mickey Mouse this week at the United Artists' home office. Campaign to signalize this joyous occasion has been prepared and theatremen invited to tell the folks all about the birthday party.

Complete program of Mickey Mouse and Silly Symphony subjects are available for a full show and many houses are playing repeats on the Disney subjects in addition to the regular bills. Songs, contests and various of the famous toys are being stressed.

Sound Photos of "Romeo" Opening Wired to Coast

The recent Broadway premiere of MGM's "Romeo and Juliet" at the Astor Theatre included all the top slants appropriate to so important an opening with a few more that the Howard Deitz division thought up. The newest and most unusual was the Electric-eye device by which photos of the opening were transmitted via sound to Los Angeles for publication in the local Examiner the same day. Copies of the photos were relayed to Irving Thalberg, producer of the picture. Due to the difference in time, the shots were received on the Coast two hours ahead of New York time and thus it may be said that the studios had the photos before the show had started in New York.

Lights on the front of the theatre in number topped any other previous opening at the Astor, electric sign containing 12,000 bulbs made up in form of special animation new to Broadway and attracting the deserved attention. Another "light" idea that caused plenty of humming was the placing of reflector signs on all important highways into New York which when hit by headlights of cars disclosed the theatre copy.



Billboard campaign was another factor with 148-sheets topping any size yet conceived by MGM. Each letter of title and star's name was eight-sheet in size. Newspaper advertising was also given a different slant with the inclusion of reservation coupons to be filled in and clipped.

Tremendous National Campaign Planned

To work out the advance arrangements satisfactorily, more than the usual number of Billy Ferguson's field exploitation forces are working in the individual key cities, three being assigned to single spots to develop local campaigns. They are getting behind the distribution of study guides and also checking the planting in schools and libraries of the specially life-size stills showing the actual Veronese backgrounds.

Contest angle has been covered with hookin with French Line by which two trips to Stratford-on-Avon and one to Hollywood, plus more than 1,000 special prizes will be available to the public. The contest takes the form of illustrated essays open to three classifications, high schools, colleges and woman's clubs.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Executives Honor Quigley Plaque Winner

As it happened that Sid Holland, first winner of two Quigley Silver Plaques in one year, was vacationing in New York recently, and as he had been voted the Silver for July on MGM's "San Francisco", it was fitting that the Elkhart, Ind., theatreman should be honored with a presentation of his Award by Howard Dietz, MGM director of advertising and publicity. Pictured at the ceremony shown above were, left to right, Edward M. Saunders, MGM Western sales director; Sid Holland; Sam Schirley, MGM Chicago district sales manager; Howard Dietz, and A-Mike Vogel, chairman, Managers' Round Table.

Packard Cars for Theatremen In RKO "Swingtime" Contest

Managers and theatre publicity men of theatres in the U. S. playing RKO Radio's "Swingtime" up until and including Oct. 31, are eligible to enter the exploitation contest tied in to Packard cars wherein three of the new models are offered. Three prizes will be given, one in each class for best campaign in towns of 150,000 and over; in towns of 50,000 to 150,000 and in towns of less than 50,000.

To compete, theatremen are asked to forward entry blank to nearest RKO exchange. One prize will be given to any one theatre and only one name, either that of the manager or publicity man, is to appear on the entry blank.

M-G-M Issues Press Book On "Killer Dog" Short

Getting into quick action to take wide advantage of the part the Pete Smith "Killer Dog" short played in the recent dog trial in Brockport, N. Y., M-G-M has crowded a lot of the resultant publicity into the press sheet on the reel with further suggestions on how to put over the slant.

Exhibitors are urged to present the subject with an introductory trailer which explains the part the film played in the case, wherein Howard Deitz had projection equipment sent to Brockport so that the presiding judge could see the short which closely parallels the "Idaho" trial. Herb Morgan, working on short subject in the home office, is credited with the idea.

"Are you ready for Fall?"

Round Tablers will be interested and pleased to know that Harry Goldberg, Warner Theatres Philadelphia zone advertising director and winner of the 1935 Quigley Bronze Grand Award, has been appointed to the post of Warner Theatres home office advertising manager, to take the spot occupied by Mort Blumenstock, Mort stepping up to become second in command to S. Charles Einfeld.

Goldberg has done a grand job in Philadelphia and every Round Tabler joins with us in wishing him the best of the very best for the biggest kind of deserved success in the new and important situation.

Haggar Converts Front Into Castle for "Ghost"

The entire front of the Castle Cinema, Merthyr, Tydfil, Great Britain, for "Ghost Goes West" was converted into an old-time castle by H. P. Haggar (see photo). Street parades were staged with staff dressed in full Scotch dress walking behind each other carrying banners announcing playdates. Another stunt was empty car touring city with sign reading "This car reserved for the gourie ghost."

Haggar dressed an empty shop window with a realistic display, back of which was covered with seascape cloth and in front stood a compoboard castle high on simulated rocks made out of plywood and painted. An attractive cutout of the Queen Mary stood in the center of the display, and at night the window was illuminated by pale blue lights.

Perlman's Co-op Ad

Out in Milwaukee, Harold J. Perlman, advertising and publicity director, Saxe Amusement Co., promoted a full page co-op page, printed in blue and black. Three-quarters of the page was devoted to theatre ad, which was paid for by 25 cooperating merchants, and copy sold theatre's cooling plant and show.

Railroad Tieups Made For "Yellowstone"

For the murder, mystery thriller "Yellowstone," Universal's exploitation department has just completed a tieup with the Northern Pacific and Union Pacific Railroads which will net the picture class "a" windows from coast to coast. Special window cards have been prepared by both lines whose routes run through the world-famous park, plugging the beautiful setting and thrilling mystery angles of the pictures. Cards will also be placed in prominent travel agency windows and all stations of these two railroads.

Studio Stills Used For Lobby Display

That team of Dannenberg-Goodman at Warner's Theatres in Cleveland have found an excellent use for the glossy stills sent out by the various studios. Planted in the center of their lobby at the Hipp is a large shadow box and into this is slipped the stills with captions on forthcoming releases. Gag has proved a sure attention getter and it is recommended to those using the stunt that the box be placed to the side or you'll find your lobby congested with "lookers."

Another swell display was map charting out the course taken by the China Clipper on its original trip, as a buildup for that picture.

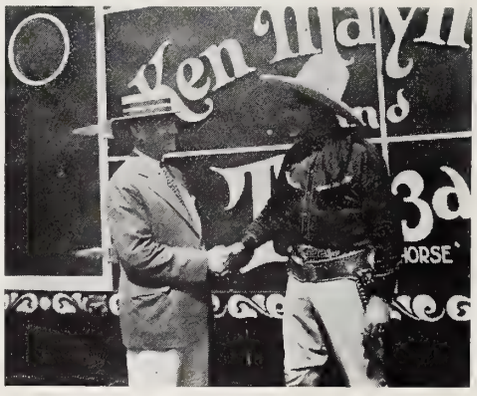
Special Preview Held By Black for "Death"

The mayor, members of city council, motor vehicle commissioner and other notables attended a special preview of "And Sudden Death" held at the Queen Theatre, Wilmington, Del., arranged by Lewis S. Black. After the showing every person attending was given copies of safety literature and asked to urge their employees to attend the picture.



Two thousand five hundred copies of the "Delaware Motorist" were promoted, sniped with picture and theatre plug and distributed throughout the city. A reported first time in over 15 years was the tacking of cards on street trolleys and one of the highlights of the campaign was boy stationed atop marquee (see photo) dubbed "the voice of safety" plugging the picture.

What he claims was a dead-ringer for W. C. Fields is shown in the accompanying photo of the front of the Paramount Theatre, Springfield, Mass., for the engagement of "Poppy" put over by William T. Powell, Western Mass. Theatres. Highlight of campaign was tieup with race track for a "Poppy handicap." Silver cup was donated and a near riot staged when the baker, so closely resembling the star, presented the cup.

Bill says the excitement was so great that a special announcement had to be made over the p. a. system that it was not actually Fields, but that he could be seen at the theatre in the picture.

Levee Ties Golf Club To "Mary of Scotland"

Bill Levee, Suffolk Theatre, Riverhead, L. I., for "Mary of Scotland" tied up with local country club and imprinted in red on golf score cards picture title, offer of box of golf balls for best score secured during week of engagement and line across top of score card read "golf was originated in Scotland." A "Mary of Scotland" drink was also plugged at the club's bar.

Davis' "Pastures" Blotters

To sell his "Green Pastures" engagement at the Capitol in Regina, Canada, Walt Davis distributed blotters with title across top and two slits below into which was placed slip of paper with copy containing the foreword in the opening of picture and note "to the patrons that have missed the beginning of the picture we repeat the Foreword so as to have a complete understanding of the story."

McManus Screens "Suzy" For Newspaper Critics

Ten days ahead of opening of "Suzy," Johnny McManus, Loew's Midland, Kansas City, Mo., screened the picture for critics, each breaking with advance writeup on Harlow and the story, which was followed by art layout and stories. Special writeups and scene mats were sent to 25 country papers within radius of as many miles of Kansas City.

Special window display was planted in 5 and 10's on "Did I Remember," de luxe photos and stills were also used. Johnny contacted leading band leaders in hotels and night clubs to feature the number and mention play dates. Department store ran a special newspaper ad on their beauty shop tying in with "Suzy," two weeks ahead large set piece was placed in main foyer, featuring the three stars in large airbrush portraits and drug store used the special pressbook backbar idea, plugging hot weather drink and lunch.

Maynard's Personal

COINCIDENCE MARKS ARRIVAL OF ARTICLE

During his recent honeymoon tour through the Eastern seaboard, Ken Finlay stopped off to visit various theatremen, which stops led to the article by the Canadian Round Tabler on this page. And coincidentally enough while Finlay was giving thought to the betterment of theatre service, Fox Midwest theatremen in convention at the same time were discussing the improvement of grosses with a better brand of theatre service in general.

Fans Turn Critics For "San Francisco"

Moviegoers became motion picture critics as part of the campaign conducted by the management of the Orpheum in Springfield, Ill., on "San Francisco." One day after the opening, arrangements were made for the radio program "Street Forum of the Air" to be turned over to opinions on the picture.

Truck covered with 24 sheets and having a p. a. system was sent through the city streets opening day making announcements concerning the film. A music tieup, featuring the hit tunes, was arranged with large local music store.

Joe Brown Cutouts Sell "Tractors"

A baby caterpillar tractor was secured by Jim Adams, Metropolitan, Regina, Canada, for his "Earthworm" date and planted in the lobby. Large cutout of Joe E. Brown in sitting position (see photo) was placed in the seat with hand wired to gear shift and canvas background provided the co-op advertising. Another cutout of Brown sitting at a tractor was placed atop marquee and proved an eye attractor.

Tractor dealer mailed postcards to farmers advising them of the caterpillar exhibit at the Regina Exhibition with cooperative advertising for the theatre. Cards were good for one admission to the theatre and Adams was reimbursed by dealer for each card turned in.

A further tieup was arranged with the distributors of General Goods in Canada in connection with a "Grape Nuts Joe E. Brown Club," company paying for and distributing heralds advertising kiddie matinee.

SERVICE STAFFS SLIPPING?

Canadian Theatreman Finds a Lack Of Efficiency in Many of Today's Operations; Recommends Check-Up

by KEN FINLAY

It seems to me, that with the coming of the fall season it would be an opportune time to openly discuss in the Round Table pages, one of the most important departments in theatre operation—Service Staffs. In the opinion of the majority of theatremen I have talked to in Canada and eastern United States, the Service Staffs in many theatres today are not the smooth, efficient bodies they were a few years ago.

The majority of us did not like the military disciplined, heel-clicking, snobbish ushers of a few years back. Nevertheless, we shall have to admit that with the gradual swing to existing conditions and systems a great deal of the efficiency of perfect theatre maintenance and operation has been lost. Our paying public never complained, nor did we do away with the flashy military uniforms, but we did do away with a deluxe theatre service to which we tried to educate our patrons—Why?

It is not that any of us wish to revert back to our old system of exaggerated West Point ushers, but I do say that the average service staff should be checked up according to the three standards of catering to the patrons: Service, Efficiency and Courtesy. These should be closely adhered to, and if any of the three is missing in our present day service system then the chief or captain of the ushers needs to be "pulled up on the carpet."

Lists Things to Check-Up

The sloppy way the front of some houses are conducted today is a crime. A close checkup on some of the following complaints from various managers will show that all is far from right:

It is generally agreed that "handling patrons" is one of the greatest breaches in theatre etiquette. There is no excuse why an usher should have to "handle a patron." On busy nights, when crowds are coming and leaving theatres, patrons can be held in check by "blocking" as easily as "handling." However, it is still being done, and I know of no easier way to offend a woman than by having an usher or doorman direct her by putting a hand upon her.

Usher directors are a thing of the past, and it seems that today a patron must wander around a strange theatre until he finds the orchestra or balcony, and then if he asks the aisle usher very nicely, the usher will escort him to a seat. This is now done without a flashlight (in some cases), so that the patron will fall all over the seats and disturb the other patrons in the row.

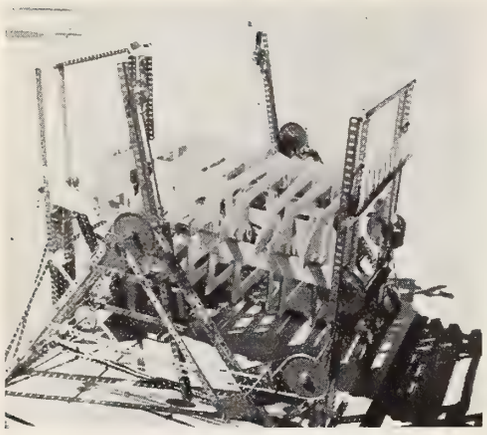
"Patrons' comments and ushers' suggestion" cards used to be distributed among the Service Staff, and I have seen more than one good idea, put into practical use from these cards. Perhaps, the usher used to take more interest in his work, if he thought that he was given a little responsibility and credit for having more brains than to just lead people to their seats.

The "Miss" and "Mr." salutation among the members of the house and service staff has always been a big selling point with the patrons, and gave a theatre dignity that "family-operated" businesses do not have. The usage of surnames between fellow members of the front house staff will always be the only accepted form in modern theatres.

Torn theatre stubs are often seen on the carpets in many theatres. The chief should instruct all his men to pick up these and other waste articles and place same in a container located in some inconspicuous corner for this purpose.

Decries Neglect of Bulletin Boards

As the service staff in any theatre makes the initial impression and indicates to patrons how efficiently a theatre is operated, neatness of all members of staff should be checked carefully. Plenty of soap, fresh linen, dickies and shoe polish should be every chief usher's first thought of the day.



Bulletin-board notices in ushers' rooms seem a thing of the past. Ushers used to take an interest in these notices such as on coming attractions and when queried by patrons on certain coming pictures were able to answer intelligently and in this manner often made additional patronage for the attraction.

I know that some of this lack of co-operation and discipline in many service staffs is perhaps due to the staff being cut down and many of the men doubling. However, a large percentage of these ushers have held their positions for a number of years, and are still as good as they were, but with conditions being as they are, have fallen into a rut. With the reduction of staffs and salaries, many theatremen have discontinued service staff meetings, to try to offset the long hours in the theatre. Nevertheless, a good pep meeting never hurt a service staff or a manager, and in many parts of the country these meetings are being resumed.

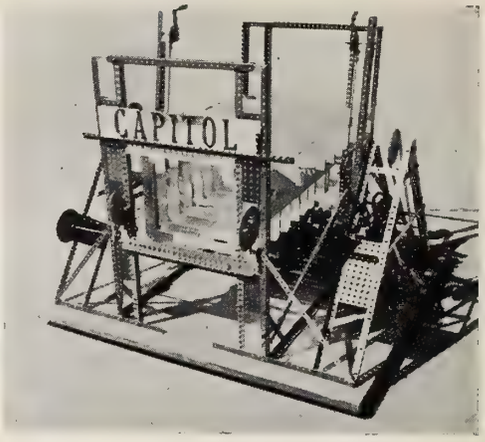
Builds Machines For Animation Of 8x10 Stills



To left and right are shown front and side views of the working parts of animation built by Manager Paul Valliere, Capitol, Quebec, the newly married theatreman having created this with the aid of a Meccano construction set. Paul has utilized the same machinery before but says that this one is his most ambitious effort yet.

The new animation machine consists of 10 cardboard frames in which are inserted regular eight by 10 stills. The arms on each side take the frames one by one and carry them to the back while the nine others advance the proper distance for another frame to be taken up likewise. Indirect lighting on the stills helps make them more attractive.

Boxed in a glass case, Valliere has set the machine on a stand in front of the house and forwards photos to show some of the crowds around the display in operation daily from noon to closing. Much of the interest is created by the animation caused by the moving parts seen through the glass.

Valliere is well versed in the possibilities for display in the standard construction sets and no doubt will be glad to give further details to interested readers.

Arrows Point Way To "Lonesome Pine"

An entire pine slab front was effected by Milton Kress, Ritz Theatre, Tifton, Ga., for "Lonesome Pine"; photos showing small pine trees with arrows leading to theatre were placed on all downtown flag poles and merchants paid for full-page co-op ad. Streets were also stenciled with arrows. Extra scene mats and publicity stories were planted in local and county papers.

Scott's Co-op Ad

One of the first stunts reported to us by Sid Scott in his new assignment at the Capitol in Sudbury, Canada, was a co-op page ad of local merchant advertising his "going out of business" sale. Streamer down side of ad carried offer of two guest tickets at Sid's show to each purchaser of $5.00 worth of merchandise.

Barcelona Street Bally Plugs Fight Pictures

One of the last street stunts put over in Spain before shooting started was a traveling prize-ring in Barcelona mounted on a motor truck to advertise the Louis-Schmeling pictures at the Astoria Cine and sent out by Joaquin Gallego Prat, exploitation manager of Radio Films, S.A.E.

The truck equipment was a miniature reproduction of a regular ring, with ropes, pail, sponge, etc., with two well known local fighters (see photo) in fighting togs staging mimic combats as the truck circulated the town. Well-known newspaper boxing writer refereed the mixing and appears in the photo between the two battlers with Prat on extreme left.

Super-Salesman Contest Planted for "Tractors"

R. J. Vogel, Fox Theatre, Riverside, Cal., for "Earthworm Tractor" initiated a contest among newspaper carriers which was dubbed "Riverside's Own Alexander Botts." Winner in order to take the monicker and prizes was required to prove himself the best super-salesman.

Newspapers plugged deal, theatre procured letter from Joe E. Brown which was published and addressed to the contesting newsboys and added space was contracted for by local tractor dealer. City streets were covered with roving tractor bally and merchants displayed window cards.

"Scrappy" Puppet Theatre Used in Columbia Tiein

Columbia Pictures have effected a nationwide tieup to break in their animated "Scrappy" cartoons with Pillsbury Flour, which will break in grocery stores and theatres throughout the United States. Radio, national publicity and advertising contracts will be utilized.

Dealers will be provided with special counter displays and theatre exhibitors will be offered "Scrappy" Theatres free as prizes at special matinees. Each theatre comes with six complete puppets, including Scrappy, Yippy, Oopy and the Chinaman. Each part is die-cut so that no scissors or paste are necessary to set them up. In addition to the theatre, the folder contains play-money, tickets and everything necessary to put on the show.

Hospitals Contacted For "His Brother's Wife"

For the Denver opening of "His Brother's Wife," Harry Golub, RKO Orpheum Theatre, held a screening for the press and staff members of the local hospitals week ahead. All doctors were telephoned and given sales talk on Taylor and his part in the picture.

Milk bottle hangers were distributed in advance, announcements made over radio, carrier boys handed out heralds and bumper strips sold cast, title and playdates. Newspapers carried special box selling the date and week ahead teaser campaign was started.

Schiller's Co-op Ad

Harry Schiller of the Grand Theatre in Grand Island, Neb., promoted a full page co-op ad on "Earthworm Tractors" with streamer across top of page reading "The big yell of the year." Each of the merchants' ads carried the line and small cuts of Joe Brown. Center of page contained theatre ad with playdates, etc.

New Front Constructed By Chatham for "Show Boat"

An entire new front was constructed (see photo) by L. A. Chatham for his "Show Boat" date at the Sooner Theatre in Norman, Okla., with large compo board boat planted atop marquee. Boat was painted black all over and backed with blind stop, windows were backed with yellow crepe paper and big marquee lights behind it. Anchor and chain were hanging from the bow and Chatham reports entire display was constructed from salvage material.

Usher in Lobby Booth Answers "Pastures" Questions

Ed Miller, Warner's Hipp, Cleveland, staged a neat exploitation campaign for "Green Pastures," planting a special information booth with an usher in lobby answering questions about the picture and distributing cards to patrons.

A four-page pamphlet called "Interesting Facts About the Green Pastures" was passed out at the Cinema Club Great Lakes Exposition booth, the theatre, office buildings and sent out by direct mail. A general letter was also sent to all educational and service club leaders, PTA heads, club women, civic leaders, etc. A special address was made by Sid Dannenberg over the Hollywood Highlights program with nightly plugs over the station and Hall Johnson Choir recordings were played at intervals during the day.

Foreign and community papers were contacted three weeks ahead for display material and publicity, busses were bannered and announcements were displayed in all downtown hotels.

Beauty Parlors Visited By Columnist for "Suzy"

Through a tieup arranged by J. V. Minton, Shea's Theatre, Erie, Pa., editor of a column called "Sally Shopper" visited beauty parlors to get their reaction on how women are changing from blonde to brownette and in the Sunday issue devoted her entire column to Jean Harlow in "Suzy."

Electrical transcriptions and announcements were made over radio station, special lobby front with star names in electric letters was used and classified ad contest was planted in paper.

THE JULY "FIRST MENTIONS"

What Theatremen Worley, Tucker and MacDonald Accomplished in Winning Their Quigley Honors

Since the publication in the August eighth issue of some highlights on the premiere in Peoria, Ill., of "Earthworm Tractor," with Joe E. Brown in person as guest of honor, the campaign put on at the Madison Theatre under the supervision of Len C. Worley, Great States city manager, was entered in the Quigley July Awards and took down a First Mention. Further details of the top slants are now given.

Ace newspaper promotion was the landing of front page streamers in all Peoria papers on the day of Brown's arrival, an unusual procedure on part of the local press. The circulation drive put on with the Journal Transcript was built around making "Alexander Botts, Juniors," out of Peoria boys and girls who were given tickets to a special morning show for two new subscriptions. In return the paper ran two full pages on the picture, premiere, etc., and in the form of broadsides thousands of these were distributed to every home in Central Illinois. Special circulars on the drive were distributed to all newsboys, boys' and girls' clubs.

Day of star's arrival was officially proclaimed a "Joe E. Brown Day" by the mayor, the proclamation displayed in a downtown window and later presented to the star from the stage of the theatre. Street parade was headed by 50 motorcycle police and 30 cars carrying city heads, chamber of commerce officials, theatremen, newspaper executives and other prominents. Caterpillar Tractor Company Band led the parade through the main streets.

For the premiere, stores in a four-block area were decorated, as were the streets. Light poles were hung with "welcome" shields. Aerial bombs were exploded at minute intervals, powerful flood-lights borrowed from the National Guard were played into the sky lighting stunt planes over the theatre. Band rendered selections from a specially-constructed bandstand. Street ballyhoo that attracted was a bannered caterpillar tractor with driver dressed to resemble the star.

Tucker Lists 34 Tieins On "Lord Fauntleroy" Campaign

Despite the fact that the Park Theatre in Roselle Park is a neighborhood house in a town of 9,000 and that he played the picture very late, Manager John Tucker managed to put together a very strong campaign on "Fauntleroy" without the assistance of any daily newspaper.

Tucker led off with a personal endorsement lobby poster copy headed: "I Have Seen More Than 3,000 Pictures Since Entering Show Business" and followed this with a 40 by 60 proclamation to the public. Both of these being quite new to the town, were effective. Three contests also clicked, a coloring idea for children, a "best dressed dog" parade and a "funniest sign" contest in Tucker's weekly paper, with tickets given for those submitting the most amusing signs they had seen. Further dog stuff was the sending of letters to all members of county kennel club calling attention to the Great Dane in the picture, with details of his history, size, etc., and inviting them to come over and take a look.

Street ballys were unique. One had three boys sweeping the sidewalks (see photo) back banners reading, "We are making a clean sweep for," etc. Tucker also planted a telescope in the park to see the "stars," had a man in the lobby seated the day ahead waiting to buy the first ticket, had a boy on the streets carrying a large cutout alarm clock with copy reading: "Now is the time to see," etc., and put another youngster out wheeling a toy wagon with a large heart reading, "He will steal your heart," etc. The fake candid camera gag was also used with cards distributed reading, "We didn't take your picture but" and "closed for the day" signs also liberally distributed.

Letters were addressed to the clergy in five surrounding towns, special cutouts planted in prominent spots, such as railroad stations, police booths, golf courses. Boats were bannered, bookmarks and napkins imprinted, windows decorated and other helpful tieins made to tell all the folks that "Fauntleroy" had come to town.

"In the Bag," Says MacDonald On His "Earthworm" Drive

To immediately sell the comedy slant of the picture, Manager W. H. MacDonald of the Liberty, Great Falls, Mont., put out a comic who distributed small bags lettered " It's In the Bag" and containing peanuts with copy on his "Earthworm Tractor" date. Then having got that one across, MacDonald threw a party for the Caterpillar personnel in that sector which hit the papers. Other publicity was gained by mention of the theatre as part of the program in a local Catholic convention of the Great Falls diocese.

Reported successful was a radio contest on "What was the most amazing thing you ever saw an Earthworm Tractor do?" and the top street bally was a specially constructed "earthworm" (see photo) which led a street parade and was otherwise used. Another outside idea that stopped 'em was the distribution by newsboys and usherettes of copies of the Earthworm News, this following the broadcast on the radio contest. The parade was a traffic-stopper and with the aid of the tractor companies, quite elaborate.

MacDonald received permission to print the programs for the weekly band contest in exchange for top mention of the date and also put out "Vote For" cards during important election for Governor, youth resembling the star doing the distributing.

Tractors were planted in the lobby, on the street and the cooperating companies aided in other ways. The best windows in town were secured for the date, napkins and grocery bags imprinted and to finish up MacDonald secured extra publicity with the attendance of local hotel man who said that campaign gave him the desire to see the picture, his first in ten years.

Guidotti; F. Simms and O. L. Daris; B. Nally and S. L. Lynch; D. McGee and N. E. Olliver; W. G. Mathews and R. T. Tomlinson; A. L. Leonard and G. T. Jones; R. Tomkins and H. J. Abernathy; L. B. Smith and H. Jones; W. Winkle and R. R. Robins; T. Turk; N. A. Marshall; S. T. Snow. This, I must admit, is a good list of answers for hot weather.

The following answers to Section A have been selected for publication. First, that of B. DeVietti, who says:

"Good maintenance practice with respect to stocking spare parts requires that at all times there be on hand, tested and ready for use, such spare parts as will enable the projectionist to rectify any of the troubles that might occur that he is able to cope with, and that a spare part would remedy. The spare parts and the number of each to be kept on hand will of course depend upon the type of equipment, accessibility of supply, whether or not the theatre is receiving regular service, and other things. The logical course is to stock such number of those parts likely to be most often needed, and a less number of those that give trouble less frequently."

J. R. Prater says:

"Good maintenance with regard to stocking spare sound equipment parts demands that spares be kept in stock for every such part as may reasonably be expected to fail, and thus stop the show. Very few sound equipment parts are subject to deterioration when not in use, provided they be properly stored, which involves protection from light in the case of some parts, vibration, moisture and excessive heat in the case of others. Dry batteries perhaps suffer most from age, but may cause trouble at any time, hence spare batteries are an insurance well worth while. Tubes, exciter lamps, fuses and other parts demanding more or less frequent replacement should be stocked in ample number, even though a supply dealer be just around the corner. A five-minute dark screen or silent speakers is something to avoid, and the spare that is ready for use costs no more than it would after the trouble occurred. The more distant the source of supply the more spare parts should, of course, be stocked.

"If the location be remote, then wisdom demands that in addition to an ample supply of those parts that may be expected to fail occasionally, at least one of each size of transformer, resistor, condenser, speaker unit (the more especially where only one speaker is used) and all other parts that, while they are not expected to fail very often, still if they do the show is stopped until a new part can be obtained. In such localities it is good practice to, if at all possible, install dual channel amplifiers. This is especially advisable where the projectionist in charge is more or less limited in experience and knowledge."

(B) W. Limmroth says:

"Lens ports should be large enough to allow for any ordinary shifting of the projector that may later be required. The dimensions for wall opening (10 x 12 inches) listed in the Bluebook of Projection are ample to permit any such change. After the projectors are installed, anchored and the light properly located upon the screen, the wall opening should be reduced until the opening is just a trifle larger than the actual light beam. While it is true I have not as yet seen or used the method of port reduction suggested in the Bluebook of Projection, I do not see how a better one, or even one as good, could be devised.

"Lens ports should not be covered with glass unless it be absolutely necessary. There are many objections to such practice. For example, every surface of glass adds to light loss by reflection. It is very difficult to keep glass surfaces perfectly clean. If both surfaces be not scrupulously clean, reflection losses will be increased, the screen image more or less distorted and its definition injured. Except that rather expensive optical glass be installed, one cannot be certain that no light distortion occurs."

W. Edmonds says:

"In my opinion, the best lens port arrangement possible, where a rear shutter and rear change-over is used, consists of a hood that snaps over the lens barrel by means of an elastic, which enables its convenient removal for cleaning the lens or other operations. This hood extends to the outlines of the wall opening, to which it is attached in any convenient manner. The hood may be made from heavy velvet, two thicknesses, or even three, which would stop all sound, so that no glass is required in the port."

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 38

(A) Describe the three-element vacuum tube. Tell in what respect it is different from the rectifying tube and what "plate current" and "space current" is.

(B) Does the use of raw cement projection room floors represent good practice? Explain.
